Direct Response Ad Creation Framework SOP - Expanded Version

Presented By Jeremy Haynes

[TLDR (too long didn't read) Version Can Be Found Here.]

Made For:

Personal Brands, High Ticket Product or Service Businesses, Digital Marketers, Entrepreneurs, and Anyone looking to direct response video ad creatives.

PART 1: FOUNDATIONS OF DIRECT RESPONSE VIDEO ADS

1. What Is Direct Response Advertising?

Direct response advertising compels a specific action from your audience. Unlike branding or "awareness" ads, direct response ads say, "Click here now," "Schedule a call," "Download this guide," or "Buy now." Everything else in the ad (the script, visuals, structure, hook) supports that singular next step.

Key takeaway: Whenever you create a direct response ad, you're optimizing for an immediate and measurable action—whether it's a lead form submission, a booked call, a purchase, or something else.

Why Video (Not Images) for Direct Response?

- Video grabs attention in the feed better than static images, primarily because moving visuals and human faces are harder to scroll past.
- Context & Explanation: In a 30–90 second video, you can convey urgency, credibility, and address objections far better than a single image.
- Dynamic ad platforms (Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, YouTube) often give more cost-effective reach to video ads, especially short-form vertical videos.

2. Trust the Algorithm—Stop Fighting the Platform

Modern advertising platforms (Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, etc.) track tens of thousands of data points per user—for example, their interests, behaviors, online purchases, and real-time engagement. The system's algorithmic intelligence is far beyond what you can manually optimize.

Key Principle: Dynamic Creative

- Old Way: You create a single, specific ad combination (one piece of copy, one video, one headline) and let it run.

- Modern Way: You supply multiple variations (e.g., up to 10 videos, 3–5 headlines, 3–5 pieces of body copy), then turn on "Dynamic Creative."

- Why it works: The platform automatically combines these elements and serves the best-performing variants to each user—leading to lower costs and higher conversions.

Short vs. Long Variations

- Half Your Assets Short: e.g., a 30-second ad with minimal copy.

- Half Your Assets Long: e.g., a 60–90 second ad that addresses deeper reasons or short testimonials.

- Let the Platform Decide: Different user segments respond to different lengths and formats.

3. In Market vs. Needs Convinced

One of the biggest takeaways from the transcript is to prioritize "in market" audiences. In market means they already know they want the result you're promising (for instance, if you sell a real estate course, they already believe real estate is a great wealth-builder; they're just looking for the best approach or teacher).

1. In Market (3–4% of your total addressable audience)

    - Already "sold" that they need what you're offering.

    - Cost to convert is lowest.

    - Sales cycles are shorter and friction is minimal.

    - Example: Someone who's already excited about Airbnb investing but hasn't decided whose program to buy.

2. Needs Convinced (30% of your market)

- Know they want the general outcome (e.g., “I want a second income”), but not 100% sure your method is correct.
- Need more “why” content, so cost per conversion is higher.
- Higher no-show and churn risk.

3. Everyone Else (the cold mass)
   - Not on the table initially. Trying to convert them first is ultra-expensive and causes chaotic lead quality.

Core Lesson: Begin your campaign structure and messaging for in-market prospects. The messaging for someone who “already wants X” differs drastically from someone who “isn’t sure if X is the right move at all.”

4. The Basic Ad Flow: Hook → Reasons → CTA

All direct response video ads, no matter the length or editing style, can be boiled down to:

1. Hook: The first 3–5 seconds that decide whether people keep watching or scroll away.
2. Reasons (a.k.a. The Body): The middle portion that justifies why your viewer should trust you, want your offer, or see your solution as unique.
3. Call to Action (CTA): Tells them exactly what to do next, e.g., “Click the link,” “Fill out this form,” “Schedule your call,” or “Buy here.”

Hook: The “Bait” That Matches Real-Time Context

- Speak to real-time interests: For example, if your audience is “experienced real estate investors,” start with “Already own multiple properties but want to boost your ROI without adding overhead? You’ll want to see this.”
- Use environment or specificity: Example from the transcript: “You’re still riding meme coins? Let me show you why that might be a disaster—and a better alternative.”

- Keep it natural: The hook must feel integrated into the content they're already consuming.

Reasons: Emotional + Logical

- Why This is the real substance of your ad. Answer: "Why is your approach better than alternatives?" or "Why does my audience need it right now?"

- Stories & Data: Use 1–2 punchy success points or micro-case studies. Don't overdo it with random fluff.

- Trust & Familiarity: People want to know it's "for them," so highlight specifics (e.g., "Tons of overhead with fix-and-flips? Our method requires nearly zero maintenance!").

CTA: Be Direct—And Be Clear

- Example: "Go to the link below to see how we help part-time real estate investors scale faster with short-term rentals. I'll share everything in a quick training video."

- Add a "So you can" statement: "Click below so you can watch a short VSL where I break down the steps for profitable Airbnb arbitrage."

5. Environment & Visual Consistency

From the transcript, one major theme was how your ad's visual environment should resonate with your audience's feed. If your audience loves luxury cars, or they follow pages about boat storage or real estate, placing yourself in a relevant environment (or referencing it quickly) immediately establishes that you're "one of them."

- Ty Lopez Example: Standing in a garage with supercars to catch the eye of "car lovers" or wealth-focused watchers.

- Luxury Real Estate: Filming in front of a premium property or on location.

- Professional Setting: If you're raising capital from accredited investors, a straightforward, well-lit office with business-casual attire works best.

Remember: Don't overdo it or fake it. Authentic is better than forced "Lambo & Mansion" vibes if that's not your style or brand.

---

6. Where Do We Go From Here?

This sets the foundation. You now know:

1. Direct response is about a singular conversion action.
2. Trusting the platform (dynamic creative, short & long variations).
3. In market vs. needs convinced—and why the in-market crowd is gold.
4. The universal 3-step ad flow: Hook → Reasons → CTA.
5. Visual alignment to your audience's interests and feed environment.

Coming Up Next (Part 2/10)

In Part 2, we'll dive deeper into identifying your "In Market" Demographic and fleshing out the exact hooks that speak directly to them. We'll cover:

- Pinpointing the "who" (their circumstances, mindset, pain points).
- Translating that into "hook language" so they instantly say, "That's me!"
- How to quickly test multiple hook variants for less cost.

Stay tuned!

Homework / Action Items

1. Review your current ads (if you have them). Check if you're mixing up "in market" and "needs convinced" messaging.

2. List out 3 dynamic variations for your next campaign:

    - Short copy vs. Long copy

    - Short video vs. Long video

    - Different headlines that speak to different angles (at least 2–3).

3. Start brainstorming your environment – what do your ideal customers see in their social feed daily, and how can your video seem contextually at home in that feed?

Key Quote Recap (from the transcript):

- "Images are easy to ignore, videos are easier to consume."

- "The old school way is forcing a single creative… The new school way is trusting the platform to pick the best combos."

- "Start with the 3–4% who are already in the market… That's your highest ROAS."

- "Hook, reasons, call to action. That's it. Keep it simple."

End of Part 1. In Part 2, we'll hone in on the "in market" approach, hooking the right audiences from the get-go. Be ready to upgrade your creative testing and fully exploit the power of direct response video ads.

PART 2: IDENTIFYING & HOOKING YOUR "IN MARKET" AUDIENCE

1. What Does "In Market" Mean—And Why Does It Matter?

In the transcript, Jeremy often references the 3–4% of your total addressable market who are "in market." These people:

- Already believe in the broad category or vehicle you're selling (e.g., real estate, trading, content creation, etc.).
- Don't need to be told why the overarching industry makes sense (e.g., "Does real estate even work?" They already know it does).
- Need which or who: They're evaluating which approach or which expert to pick.

Key Advantage:

- Shorter sales cycles and higher ROAS—they're already motivated and in search of a specific solution.
- Lower friction—less time "convincing" them that the fundamental opportunity is valid.

2. Different Types of "In Market" Segments

Not all "in market" buyers are identical. Sub-segments can exist even within that 3–4%. Consider a real estate example:

1. Current Short-Term Rental Investors

    - Already have multiple properties on Airbnb/VRBO.
    - Want to optimize or expand quickly.

2. Long-Term Rental Investors
    - They believe in real estate but may be curious if short-term rentals have better returns.
3. People with a Tax Burden
    - Know real estate can reduce taxes, so they're scanning for a specific strategy or property type.
4. Ambitious Newcomers (But Still "In Market")
    - Maybe they haven't done a deal yet, but they're actively searching for a program or mentor to jumpstart them—already convinced "Real Estate is the best wealth builder."

Each segment has its own motivations, language, and circumstances. Make sure your ads speak to the specifics of each (especially the "circumstances" and "why they want more/better/faster results").

3. Crafting Hooks for the "In Market" Prospect

Every direct response ad starts with a Hook. For "in market" audiences, the hook must assume they're already sold on the broad opportunity. You only need to introduce your unique angle, approach, or story.

3.1 The "You Already Know" Opener

- Example: "You already know real estate is one of the safest ways to build wealth, but have you considered short-term rentals for doubling your monthly cash flow?"

- Why it works: It instantly acknowledges their pre-existing belief. You're not pitching them on "why real estate," you're pitching on "this method within real estate."

3.2 The "You're Doing This, But…" Opener

- Example: "You've already tried day trading, but it's draining you. There's a simpler approach to consistent returns—selling options premiums."

- Why it works: You're highlighting a mainstream method they already know, then offering a better alternative.

3.3 Circumstance Openers

- Example (high earner in a 9–5): "Your job pays you six figures, but you still want an extra $3k–$5k a month, without messing up your career. Good news—I found a trading approach that fits busy professionals perfectly."

- Why it works: You reference their life circumstance—a big paycheck from an employer—yet they want more. This shows immediate relevance.

4. Speaking Their Language: Big-Picture vs. Micro Details

"In market" folks want the bigger result—they don't need to be sold on the basics. They do, however, appreciate details that confirm your unique approach is:

1. Faster or easier than the standard approach.

2. More profitable or less risky than the standard approach.

3. Compatible with their time, lifestyle, or resources.

4.1 Use "Circle Talk"

From the transcript's anecdote on circles, triangles, and squares:

- Circle People (visionaries, decision-makers) want to see the big picture—fast.

- Example copy snippet: “You’ve tested the waters. You believe real estate builds millionaires. This new short-term rental method can add an extra 5-figure monthly cash flow without endless phone calls and property visits.”

Why it works: It’s broad enough to get them nodding immediately—not drowning them in tiny data points or disclaimers.

5. Qualifying and Disqualifying Right Inside the Ad

Because “in market” prospects are so valuable, your ad can do a bit of light gatekeeping. This helps your pixel, your ad targeting, and your downstream funnel.

- Example: “If you already own at least one property and want more monthly income—this 2-minute video is for you.”

- Example: “This isn’t for people who think real estate is too risky or unproven. If you’re already convinced real estate is the path to wealth, keep watching.”

Result: You attract the segment of watchers who truly resonate, and you deter time-wasters or “needs convinced” skeptics.

6. Real-Time Contextual Hooks (Playing to the Algorithm)

Platforms like Facebook, YouTube, and TikTok deliver ads in near-real-time based on recent user behavior. If your buyer just browsed “best real estate investing strategies” or “why day-trading sucks,” the algorithm can show them your relevant ad that calls out that scenario.

Pro tip:

- Incorporate mini lines that say, “Still scrolling for the fix to your day-trading headaches?” or “Already hitting your watchlist daily and not seeing the results you want?”

- The platform sees your ad is about exactly what they just engaged with, so it's likely to serve it to them at a lower CPM, and they're likely to watch.

7. Simple Exercise: Write a Quick "In Market" Hook

Step-by-Step

1. Write down your ideal buyer's top 1–2 beliefs (about your niche) that prove they want what you offer.

2. Acknowledge that belief in 1–2 lines.

3. Hint at your unique spin or advanced approach.

Example (Fitness Coach for Busy Pros):

1. They already believe daily exercise is important, but they can't find time.

2. "You know you need a consistent fitness routine, but 12-hour workdays keep blocking you."

3. "That's why I designed a 15-minute morning protocol that's proven to burn more fat than most 1-hour classes."

Boom—clear, relevant, and quickly hooking the "in market" crowd (people who already want a structured daily fitness habit).

8. Avoiding the "Needs Convinced" Trap (Too Early)

It can be tempting to broaden your targeting or messaging: "If you aren't sure trading works, let me show you why stocks are a safe bet!" But that's more "mass market" or "needs convinced." It explodes cost-per-lead, lowers show-up rates, and spawns chaos on your sales calls.

- Start with the 3–4% who are in market.

- Only later—if you want to scale big—test angles for “maybe real estate is good?” or “maybe trading is good?”

Big takeaway: Master your “in market” messaging first. Exploit it to the maximum. Then expand outward.

9. Putting It All Together

When building your direct response video ads, keep the “in market” approach front and center:

1. Hook: Reference the belief or situation they already hold.

2. Reasons: Justify why your unique approach or system outperforms the generic “mainstream” approach.

3. CTA: “Tap here to learn how we do it,” or “Press below to see how to get started,” etc.

Zero time wasted convincing them that your category is valid. They already believe it—just show them you’re the best in that space.

10. Action Steps

1. Segment Out Your “In Market” Audience

    - If you market to multiple sub-niches (like short-term vs. long-term real estate investors), create separate copy or separate ad sets with hooks addressing each one.

2. Draft 2–3 Hooks That Assume They’re Sold on the Industry

    - For each hook, open with “Since you already [do X], I’ll show you [Y].”

3. Test Those Hooks in short dynamic creative videos (30–60 seconds). Compare which sub-segment or angle yields the highest lead quality.

4. Watch for Quality Indicators

    - Are your show-up rates higher? Are fewer leads ghosting? That's a sign you've nailed the in-market messaging.

Coming Up Next (Part 3/10)

In Part 3, we'll refine your creative testing process—covering:

- How to combine dynamic creative with multiple "in market" hooks.
- Analyzing initial data (3-second vs. 15-second video views).
- When to refresh vs. when to scale a successful hook.

Get ready to launch and analyze your first wave of dynamic direct response video ads for the best results.

Key Quote Recap (from the transcript):

- "If you're not speaking to that 3–4% who already want it, you're gonna inflate your costs."
- "Communicate like they're already sold—no mention of why real estate at all?. Just assume they know."
- "Be short, direct, and situational in the first seconds."

End of Part 2. In Part 3, you'll learn how to systematically test your new "in market" hooks and scale winners quickly using dynamic creative.

PART 3: DYNAMIC TESTING & RAPID ITERATION

1. Why Your First Campaigns Usually Miss the Mark

Even if you've nailed down your "in market" demographic and created multiple hook variations, there's still a huge risk: you might guess wrong on your best angle—or you might guess the right angle but present it in a suboptimal video format. That's why you need a systematic approach to test multiple creative variables at once.

Key Idea:

- Traditional "one ad, one guess" approach is dead.
- Modern approach uses dynamic creative to let the platform pinpoint your best combo.

Example

Instead of one 60-second video with one piece of body copy, you might load:

- 4 different short videos (each ~30–45 seconds).
- 2–3 headlines.
- 2–3 body copy variants.
  Then let Facebook, Instagram, or TikTok combine them to see which synergy kills it on CPC, cost per lead, or cost per call.

2. Prepping Your "Hook Variations" for Launch

By now, you should have at least 2 or 3 distinct hooks aimed at your top “in market” sub-segments. (If you’re new, keep it simple—don’t overload yourself with 10 angles.)

Tips for Shooting the Videos

1. Change the environment: You might film one in your office, one outdoors, one near relevant context (e.g., if you’re a real estate coach, stand in front of a property or talk from your laptop with a property listing in the background).

2. Keep the “Hook → Reasons → CTA” structure tight. Aim for 30–45 seconds if you’re targeting busy pros.

3. Vary the vibe: One might have more “hype” editing, another might be calmer, direct-to-camera. Let the platform figure out which resonates.

Example Hook Variation

- Hook A: “You already run short-term rentals but want bigger monthly profits without adding more overhead. Let me show you how I do it.”

- Hook B: “You’ve done real estate flips; short-term rentals can be the next big jump in your monthly revenue. Here’s how.”

- Hook C: “You know real estate is the best wealth-creation tool—but have you tried short-term arbitrage? Let’s talk.”

---

3. Setting Up Your Dynamic Creative Campaign

Below is a high-level breakdown if you’re using Facebook/Instagram Ads Manager (the approach is similar on other platforms).

1. Objective: Choose “Conversions” (e.g., “Leads,” “Scheduled Calls,” or a standard event like “CompleteRegistration” if you funnel them to a booking page).

2. Campaign Budget Optimization (CBO): Switch it on if you're spending at least $100–$300/day. Otherwise, Ad Set Budget is fine at lower daily budgets.

3. Ad Set Level:

    - Targeting: If you have specific in-market audiences (e.g., custom audiences of real estate watchers, lookalikes of your best customers, or interest stacks for "Short-Term Rental," "Airbnb," "Real Estate Investing"), pick that.

    - Exclude: People who already purchased or scheduled a call.

    - Placements: Start with Automatic Placements or Advantage+ (Meta) if you're not sure. If your video is shot in 9:16 vertical, you might uncheck some weird placements like right column on desktop. Let the system do the heavy lifting.

4. Ad Level:

    - Dynamic Creative: Flip that toggle on.

    - Upload multiple videos (we recommended 2–4).

    - Enter multiple headlines (2–3).

    - Enter multiple body copy texts (2–3).

    - Call to Action button: Usually "Learn More" or "Apply Now."

You now have a test that systematically checks which combos of hook, copy, and headline crush it the hardest.

---

4. Interpreting the Early Data

4.1 The Real KPIs

- Cost per 3-Second View: Tells you how well the hook is grabbing attention. If one video is way cheaper at hooking watchers, that's a strong sign.

- Cost per Result (Lead, Appointment, etc.): Ultimately, you want the ad that generates your best leads at the lowest cost.

- Click-Through Rate (CTR) or Link Clicks: Helpful to see if your ad is at least pulling curiosity. If CTR is abysmally low (under 0.5%), your hook or copy might be too generic.

Don't over-optimize for vanity metrics—cost per lead or cost per scheduled call is gold. But do look at CTR or 3-second views to sense if a certain hook is bombing or hooking.

4.2 Minimizing Time to Statistical Significance

You can't decide a winner off 30 clicks or 2 leads. Pump enough budget so each variation gets a fair shot. If you're short on daily spend, let it run longer (like 5–7 days). If you can, push $100–$300/day so you see real differences in ~48–72 hours.

5. Knowing When to Swap, Scale, or Scrub

1. Swap: If a video is getting next to no attention or a sky-high cost per lead (like 2–3x higher than your top ad), kill it or rotate in a new variation.

2. Scale: If you see a consistent winner (cost per result is significantly lower), then feed more budget to the entire campaign. Or duplicate that ad set with a bigger budget, letting your star assets drive the volume.

3. Scrub: Revisit the losers—figure out if the hook was too complicated, the copy too long, or if it just didn't resonate with your best sub-segment.

Remember: We're not hunting for "OK" here. We want the angle that absolutely crushes cost per lead and draws the warmest, most serious prospects.

6. What If All Variations Suck?

Don't panic. If every angle bombs, one of two things is probably happening:

1. Wrong Audience: You might be hitting a “needs convinced” crowd. Or your interest stack is too broad and you’re not funneling out unqualified leads.

2. Messaging Mismatch: Perhaps you’re talking about “why real estate is great” but your in-market folks are like, “Dude, I already know that.” Or you’re ignoring the real triggers that advanced investors care about (e.g., advanced ROI metrics, minimal overhead, tax advantages).

Solution:

- Re-check your short scripts. Are you calling out the actual in-market viewer?

- Possibly try different audiences if your creative is strong but the people reached are irrelevant.

- If your “voice” is too hype-y or too general, dial it back or refine it to the big-picture “circle talk.”

7. The Hammer Them Strategy (Post-Opt-In)

The transcript repeatedly references the Hammer Them approach. Here’s the short version for context:

- Once people opt in or schedule a call, hammer them with short content ads (15–20+ pieces) to build familiarity, preempt objections, and replicate the sense of “they’ve seen 30 of your videos.”

- This boosts show-up rates, shortens the sales cycle, and ensures they walk into the call warm and trusting you.

But you only do that after you find an ad variation that consistently brings in the right leads. Otherwise you’re hammering a bunch of tire-kickers that never buy. So Part 3 is about finding those quality leads first.

8. Rinse, Repeat, & Keep Your Edge

Once you find a successful dynamic campaign setup, don't coast forever. Ad fatigue is real. People see the ad multiple times, and performance eventually dips.

Best Practices:

- Refresh your top ad variations every 3–4 weeks (or sooner if you see cost creeping up).
- Shoot new short videos—just tweak the opening line, environment, or the next layer of reasons. Keep the same structure if it's working.
- Watch for new sub-segments or seasonal angles. (Example: In real estate, the "tax season" angle might crush early in the year.)

---

9. Action Items for Part 3

1. Draft your Dynamic Creative
    - 2–4 short videos
    - 2–3 headlines
    - 2–3 copy blocks
2. Set a 5–7 Day Test Window
    - If budget is small ($100-$500/day?), you need a full week minimum.
    - If bigger ($500+/day?), you'll see trends in 3–4 days.
3. Monitor the data daily, but don't kill anything too soon.
4. Decide: Swap out losers, scale winners, or re-check your audience if everything flops.

Once you lock in your top performer(s), you'll have a golden goose for a few weeks or months. Then keep layering on new hooks or angles in the same dynamic format.

Coming Up Next (Part 4/10)

In Part 4, we'll tackle:

- Messaging beyond the click: how your landing page or funnel must mirror your ad's language.
- Strategies for making your funnel frictionless (or intentionally adding friction if you want fewer, higher-quality leads).
- Ensuring your "call funnel" or "opt-in funnel" keeps the same momentum your ad built.

Get ready to tighten up your front-end ads and your funnel so you don't lose those valuable leads once they hit your page.

Key Quote Recap (from the transcript):

- "You gotta trust the platform to pick the best combos."
- "Dynamic ads let me load up 10 videos, 5 headlines, 5 copy blocks, all interchangeable."
- "If you see something's 3–4 times better, throttle the spend. Don't watch a random guess cost you money for weeks."

End of Part 3. Next, we'll ensure that beyond your direct response video ad, your funnel resonates with the same messaging—so you close more deals without losing momentum.

PART 4: ALIGNING ADS & FUNNEL FOR MAX CONVERSIONS

---

1. Why Funnel Alignment Matters

Even a world-class direct response video ad falls flat if, upon clicking, the user hits a page that confuses them, contradicts your ad's promise, or buries the next step.

- Messaging Consistency: If your ad says "Short-Term Rentals with Minimal Overhead," your landing page must reinforce that message in the headline—instantly.
- Expectation Management: If your ad addresses only advanced real estate investors, the funnel must welcome them as advanced—rather than re-explaining basic real estate 101.
- Friction: Everything from your opt-in form, disclaimers, to visuals can either "feel right" (and build momentum) or spike bounce rates.

Real Example

If the ad says, "You already have a six-figure job—here's a trading approach for busy professionals," but your landing page starts with "Tired of paycheck-to-paycheck living?" you instantly break the trust you built. Users think, "Wait, that's not me," and they exit.

---

2. Three Core Elements to Sync

2.1 The Headline

- Mirroring the Hook: If your ad's final CTA says, "Learn how we double monthly rental income," your headline must echo that ("How to Double Your Rental Income in 90 Days—Even If You Hate Landlording").

- Short & Punchy: On direct response funnels, keep the headline to one bold promise or outcome.

2.2 The Visual or Hero Image/Video

- If your ad showed you on camera: Place a friendly image (or short loop video) of you in the same environment.

- Avoid Stock Photos: Stock images can kill credibility. A simple photo of you or your actual subject matter is better.

2.3 The Sub-Headline or Caption

- Clarify the Value: E.g., “A proven short-term rental system used by over 300 seasoned investors.”

- Match the CTA: E.g., “Watch this 4-minute walkthrough of how we arbitrage properties without heavy overhead.”

All three should confirm the user’s thought: “Yes—this page is exactly what the ad promised.”

---

3. Minimizing Landing Page Friction (Where You Need Volume)

If your goal is to build volume (many leads quickly) or you have a lower-ticket offer, you often want very little friction:

1. No Extra Steps: Link in the ad → short landing page → immediate CTA (opt-in, purchase, or watch a quick VSL).

2. No Long Forms: An email & name (or phone) might be enough if your aim is to collect leads cheaply.

3. Keep the "Extras" Tucked: If you have disclaimers or T&C, link them in the footer, not front-and-center—unless compliance rules demand otherwise.

Example

A webinar opt-in page for a $997 product could be as simple as:

- Headline: "Master Short-Term Rentals—Without Huge Down Payments"
- Sub-head: "Instantly Access This 40-Minute Training & See How Our Students Net 5-Figure Cashflow"
- Opt-in box (name/email) → "Get Instant Access"

---

4. Adding Intentional Friction (For High-Quality or High-Ticket Leads)

If you're selling $5k, $10k, or $50k+ solutions, you don't want 2,000 random tire-kickers. Instead, you want fewer qualified calls. This is where you add friction to weed out unqualified leads.

4.1 Financial Qualifier

- "Our Program Is $5,000. Have you set aside at least $1,000 to get started or can access financing?"
- This question ensures only those who can afford it click through.
- Note: Ask it after the main pitch or in an application form.

4.2 Identity or Circumstance Qualifier

- If your ad specifically says "For those who already own at least 1 rental property," ask that in the funnel: "Do you currently own a property? Yes/No."

- If “No,” either hide the scheduling link or direct them to a “Sorry, not a fit” page.

4.3 Time Availabilty or Mindset Qualifier

- “Are you committed to investing 4–6 hours a week for the next 90 days?”
- People who say “No” might be auto-segmented out.

Caution:

- Overdoing friction kills conversions.
- Use only the qualifiers that truly protect your time.

5. The Landing Page vs. VSL Page

Whether you do a classic “short opt-in page → VSL page” or “direct VSL on page one,” the principle is the same: ensure the title, bullets, and environment line up with your ad’s big promise.

Two Common Layouts

1. Layout A (Two-step):
    - Page 1: Headline + Brief Copy → “Register” or “Sign Up,” capturing Name/Email/Phone.
    - Page 2: The VSL or “Thank you, watch this video.”
    - Usually used for webinars, live events, or “lead magnet” funnels.
2. Layout B (Direct VSL):
    - Single page with a video near the top, a clear CTA button: “Apply Now” or “Schedule a Call.”

- Often used for call funnels ($5k–$50k+ offers), since you want them to watch your short video, fill out an application, and schedule a time.

Best Practice: If your audience is advanced or “in market,” layout B (straight-to-VSL) can be best. If you’re going for more quantity or want to capture all possible leads, layout A with a “teaser” can work.

---

6. Post-Opt-In or Post-Call Booking Page

After they opt in or schedule a call, you’re not done. The transcript references the “Confirmation Page” or “Thank-You Page,” which is a goldmine to:

1. Reinforce the big promise.
2. Hammer them with short content or testimonials to keep them warm.
3. Give them next steps (check your email, watch your extra training, or fill out a deeper intake form if needed).

Example

- Headline: “You’re Booked! Here’s What to Expect on Our Call.”
- Short 1–2 minute “thank you” video: “Hey, can’t wait to speak with you. Meanwhile, watch these quick success stories from clients.”
- 2–3 quick testimonials to prime them that your solution works.

Why It Works: You keep momentum high. They get more excited (or more certain they want to attend the call).

---

7. Specifics on Compliance and Disclaimers

Depending on your niche (finance, real estate, trading, etc.), you might need disclaimers. As Jeremy highlights, “Income claims attract the wrong crowd if used incorrectly—and can cause compliance nightmares.”

Suggestions:

- Put disclaimers in fine print at the bottom or after the pitch.
- Avoid or carefully word phrases like “guaranteed returns” or “100% safe.” Provide disclaimers that “past results do not guarantee future results,” etc.
- If you must disclaim earlier (based on your region’s legal requirements), try a subtle text below the fold or a quick line in your VSL.

8. A Quick Example: From Ad to Funnel

Ad Script (30s):

> Hook: “Already own 1 or 2 short-term rentals but want better monthly margins?”
> Body/Reasons: “I used to juggle overhead, cleaning schedules, and dreaded those off-season slumps. Then I built a system that’s netting me 50% more, year-round.”
> CTA: “If you want to see how I run it in 2 hours a week, tap below. Watch a quick 5-minute video now.”

Funnel Page:

1. Headline: “Boost Your Short-Term Rental Margins by 50%—Even During Off-Season.”
2. Short Sub-Headline: “Watch This 5-Minute Breakdown of the 2-Hour-a-Week System.”
3. Minimal Fields (if you want leads at scale) or Add Qualifiers (“How many properties do you own?” if you want high-quality).
4. VSL or instant embed video: Repeats the “2 hours a week” concept, shows some proof, invites scheduling a call or purchasing a low-ticket item.

Confirmation:

- “Thank you! Watch these 2 short case studies while we finalize your seat.”
- “Check your inbox for instructions—see you soon!”

Everything lines up so your traffic from that ad never feels lost or bait-and-switched.

---

9. Action Steps for Part 4

1. Review Your Existing Funnel: Does your headline, sub-head, and hero image echo your top-performing ad’s promise? If not, fix it.
2. Decide on Friction: If you’re high-ticket, add a short application step or a financial qualifier. If you want a broad audience, remove extra steps.
3. Check Post-Opt-In Flow: Confirmation page or next page should continue the excitement. Possibly embed quick testimonial reels.
4. Add Disclaimers Properly: Keep them from overshadowing your CTA but remain compliant.

Next: Watch your bounce rates, time on page, and form completion. If the landing page metrics are poor but the ads are strong, you know funnel misalignment is the culprit.

Coming Up Next (Part 5/10)

In Part 5, we’ll discuss how to handle objections and skepticism inside your ads and funnel content—so leads show up to the call (or hit the buy button) without major doubts. We’ll cover:

- Proactively answering top questions in your short videos.
- Using social proof and micro-testimonials at key points.

- Creating a “mini FAQ” in your funnel, so real prospects feel they’re in the perfect place.

Stay tuned as we refine how you neutralize friction, from the ad all the way through your funnel and onto the call/purchase page.

Key Quote Recap (from the transcript):

- “Don’t let your funnel contradict your ad, or you lose the sale right there.”
- “Sometimes we want more friction if we don’t want every broke person and their mother on the phone.”
- “After they book, keep them excited. That’s the entire point of the confirmation page. Hammer them with content.”

End of Part 4. Next, we’ll refine how to handle objections and skepticism directly in your creative and funnel elements—so the leads that come through are ready to buy, not still on the fence.

PART 5: HANDLING OBJECTIONS & BUILDING TRUST IN ADS & FUNNEL

---

1. Why Proactive Objection Handling Is Critical

In direct response ads, you rarely close the entire sale in the video. Instead, you get them to opt in, book a call, or purchase. But if a buyer sees your ad or funnel and thinks:

- “This might be too expensive.”
- “I’ve tried something like this and it didn’t work.”

- “I don’t have time for this.”

…and you don’t handle those thoughts, they quietly exit. Remember, they won’t book a call if they assume it’s a waste of time.

Solution: Tackle the top 2–4 objections in the ads (briefly) and in the funnel (brief or expanded, depending on the step).

---

2. Identifying Your Top Objections

2.1 Gather From Sales Calls

Talk to your closers or check call recordings:

- Which concerns pop up right before the buyer pulls the trigger or says “No thanks?”
- If you’re solo, reflect on your last 10–15 calls—write down repeated themes.

2.2 Use the “Prevention” Mindset

Ask yourself: What would a rational, busy prospect say to shut this down immediately?
Examples:

- “I’ve seen this ‘overnight success’ stuff before—total scam.”
- “I don’t want to stare at charts or be on calls all day—this can’t be for me.”
- “I’ve got no capital to invest.” (in real estate offers)
- “Is it still worth it if the market dips?” (trading or investing)

Once you’ve got them (2–4 main ones), plan how to calmly address them on camera and in funnel copy.

---

3. Objecting to the Objection: Two Key Approaches

3.1 Directly Refute with Logic & Examples

- Example: “Don’t worry if you lack time. I built this to function in under 2 hours a week because I had a full-time job myself. It’s the entire reason I created a simpler system.”

- Accompany with a quick story: “That’s how my client Jane kept her 9–5 but still netted an extra $3k a month.”

3.2 Weave It into a Quick Story

- Example: “You might think, ‘Isn’t real estate cyclical? What if the market crashes?’ Well, Sam hopped in last year when everyone said it was risky, and he’s already on his second property—both profitable. So while others waited, he found deals at discount.”

Pro tip: Try to keep each objection handling under 20–30 seconds in a short ad. Don’t do a 5-minute deep dive. Instead, you aim to reduce friction, not have a full debate.

---

4. Objection Handling In the Ads: Quick Examples

1. Time Objection
    - Hook: “Pressed for time but want to grow your portfolio anyway?”
    - Body: “I get it. My method runs in about 2 hours a week. So if you’ve got a busy job or kids, this still fits.”
    - CTA: “Tap below to see exactly how we fit this around your schedule.”
2. Price/Capital Objection
    - Hook: “Think you need big capital to do short-term rentals?”

- Body: “I started my first Airbnb with under $5k total. Don’t believe me? I’ll show you the step-by-step.”
- CTA: “Click below and watch our quick demo.”

3. Credibility/“Is This a Scam?”
   - Hook: “Sick of internet ‘gurus’ who promise millions overnight?”
   - Body: “Me too. That’s why I show raw, real numbers—and a strategy that scaled me from $0 to consistent $8k months in short-term rentals.”
   - CTA: “See for yourself if I’m legit. Grab this free case study below.”

---

5. Extended Objection Handling in the Funnel

When they hit your landing page or sign up for a call, they might have bigger questions. That’s where your:

- FAQ Section
- Short bullet points
- Mini-video testimonials

…come into play. (E.g., “Still worried it’s too risky? Watch how Dave overcame that fear, locked in 3 properties, and is netting $12k/mo.”)

5.1 Micro-FAQ on the Landing Page

A short list of “common questions” helps reassure them:

1. “Do I need to quit my job?” → “Nope. 2 hours a week is typical. Here’s how.”
2. “Do I need a ton of capital?” → “We show you how to start with as little as $XYZ.”

3. “What if the market changes?” → “We have proven tactics for down markets, too.”

Just enough detail to neutralize fear without bombarding them.

---

6. Trust Builders: Social Proof & Testimonials

Jeremy frequently references weaving short testimonials or case studies to handle objections:

- E.g. “You don’t believe you can do it with a 9–5? Here’s Susan. She’s a nurse who followed this strategy.”
- Short Videos: 30–60 seconds from real clients, placed on your landing page or final “Book a Call” page.
- Screenshot Collages: Real social media DMs or email feedback—quick to skim, high impact.

Critical: Keep them real. Overly polished or vague “I made $100k fast!” testimonials feel staged and can amplify skepticism.

7. “Planting Beliefs” to Avoid Buyer’s Remorse

Even after they book a call, seeds of doubt can creep in. The transcript references “hammering them” with content. Use a confirmation page or post-signup emails to:

1. Re-Highlight Key Proof: “Remember, you only need about 2 hours a week to start.”
2. Share More Wins: “Check out 2 more quick stories from busy professionals.”
3. Encourage Follow-Through: “You’ve already chosen to do this—don’t let worry steal your future success.”

This ensures by the time they hop on the sales call (or see the final checkout), they've heard multiple quick hits that say, "It works, it can work for me, and I can trust you."

---

8. Matching Objection Handling to Ad Complexity

- Short Ads (15–30s): Weave in 1 big objection: e.g., time or money. If you attempt 3 or 4 in 30 seconds, it's a mess. Focus on the biggest friction.
- Long Ads (60–90s): Possible to handle 2–3 key objections. E.g., time + capital + trust. Keep each segment snappy, or you'll lose watchers.

Always finish by pivoting back to your CTA. Don't let the ad end on an objection answer. The final note is an invitation to proceed.

---

9. Action Steps for Part 5

1. List Your Top 3 Objections: Time, cost, "scam fear," zero knowledge, etc.
2. Rewrite or Film an Ad Variation that addresses at least one major objection up front.
3. FAQ or Bullet on Funnel Page: Add a short objection-handling snippet or micro-FAQ.
4. Testimonials: Place them strategically to show real people overcame that exact fear.

Coming Up Next (Part 6/10)

In Part 6, we'll dig into:

- Scaling your best ads once you see validated cost per lead (or call)
- How to use budgets (CBO vs. ABO) effectively at higher spends

- Maintaining performance and rotating new content without losing momentum

Stay tuned: By proactively handling objections, you'll notice a higher call/lead quality. Combining that with the next step—proper scaling—catapults your revenue without rotting your funnel with the wrong prospects.

Key Quote Recap (from the transcript):

- "If you don't handle their questions, they drop off."
- "Pick 2–4 big objections. Address them in short, direct ways—sprinkle them into your funnel."
- "Add quick testimonial hits so they see it's possible. People want emotional reassurance."

End of Part 5. Next up, we'll tackle scaling strategies—so once you have the right messaging and a stable funnel, you can pour in more budget and maximize returns.

PART 6: SCALING YOUR BEST ADS FOR MAX ROI

1. What Does "Scaling" Mean Here?

Scaling simply means increasing your ad budget and traffic to multiply the leads or calls you're already generating. However, more money thrown at a campaign doesn't automatically mean more profit; in fact, cost per lead (CPL) or cost per call often creeps up if you do it haphazardly.

Goal: Maintain (or only slightly increase) your cost per result while boosting daily spend for a bigger overall net profit.

2. Check You're "Actually Ready" to Scale

2.1 You Have a Verified "Winner"

From previous steps, you should have:

- A proven hook in your short video(s) that yields a stable cost per lead or call.
- A funnel that fits that angle (i.e., your bounce rate is acceptable, your show rate or purchase rate is decent).

2.2 You Can Handle the Volume

- Does your sales team or your own schedule have the capacity to handle, say, double the calls?
- If it's an online purchase, can your support or fulfillment handle the extra volume?

If not: fix that first. Scaling leads while the back-end is shaky can crush morale and bloat no-show rates.

---

3. ABO vs. CBO for Scaling

In Meta (Facebook/Instagram) Ads, you have two main budget allocation systems:

3.1 ABO (Ad Set Budget Optimization)

- You set a specific budget per ad set.
- Good for precise control—e.g., you can keep your best ad set at $500/day and new test sets at $50/day without them starving each other.

- Downside: More micromanagement. If you have 10 ad sets, you must manually watch and tweak each budget.

3.2 CBO (Campaign Budget Optimization)

- You set one budget at the campaign level, letting Facebook automatically distribute it across ad sets.

- Good for letting the platform push more money to the top-performing ad sets dynamically.

- Downside: You lose some fine-grained control, and sometimes the algorithm might “neglect” certain ad sets, even if you wanted to test them.

Rule of Thumb:

- At lower total spend (under ~$300/day), ABO can give you more control over distribution.

- As you scale (over $500–$1,000/day), CBO can be more efficient, letting the algorithm optimize in real-time.

---

4. Gradual vs. Aggressive Budget Increases

4.1 Gradual (10–20% Increase Every 2–3 Days)

- The “safe” approach. Facebook’s learning phase isn’t jolted too hard, so cost per lead remains stable.

- Example: You spend $100/day. Increase to $120/day for 2 days. If cost per result is still good, go to $150, etc.

4.2 Aggressive (Doubling or More)

- If your funnel is super stable—like you're 100% sure it can handle double the volume—go for it.

- Risk: The platform re-enters a "learning phase," and your cost might spike for a few days before it stabilizes.

Recommendation: If you see consistently low cost per lead/call for 5–7 days, test a more aggressive jump. But watch daily performance closely.

---

5. "Scale by Duplication" Method

Some advertisers prefer duplicating a winning ad set/campaign instead of just upping the budget inside one campaign. Why?

- Fresh Learning: The new duplicate ad set starts its own learning phase, sometimes capturing a different audience pocket.

- Budget Control: You can keep the original "winner" running at the same budget (to avoid messing it up) while testing a bigger budget in a new copy.

Potential Downside:

- The new duplication might create overlap with the old campaign, especially if the same audience is used. But if you have a large enough audience (millions) or are targeting broad, it's rarely an issue.

Use whichever approach (simple budget raises vs. duplication) you find more reliable. Monitor the results.

---

6. Watch for Signs of "Scale Fatigue"

As you increase spend:

1. CPL (Cost per Lead/Call) creeps up 20–30% or more.

2. Facebook Ad Relevancy or frequency metrics show the same audience being hammered.

3. Sales team feedback: “We’re seeing leads who are less qualified.”

If performance flattens or declines significantly, stop or lower the budget. Possibly bring in new hooks, fresh videos, or expand your audience strategy.

---

7. Managing the “Audience Ceiling”

If your entire audience is ~1 million people, you can typically scale up to a certain daily spend (maybe $1k–$2k/day) before you saturate that group. Once you saturate:

- Costs spike.
- Frequency soars (people see your ad repeatedly).
- Quality plummets because it’s showing to the outer edges of that interest group.

Solutions

- Broaden your targeting if you’re artificially narrowing it. Let the algorithm find fresh pockets.
- Create new lookalikes or retargeting expansions.
- New angles: a new hook can re-ignite interest from segments of the same audience that ignored your old angle.

---

8. Refreshing Creatives While Scaling

Even if your existing ad is a winner, consistent performance can degrade over weeks. So you:

1. Keep the best "hero" ad going.
2. Add 1–2 new variations with a different hook or a slight spin.
3. Rotate them in the same campaign or new ABO sets.
4. Compare them to your hero ad's cost per lead. If they're close or better, keep them. If not, kill quickly.

Result: You maintain stable volume plus avoid "ad fatigue."

---

9. Scale in Waves

Sometimes you push from $100/day to $300/day, your cost remains stable. Hold that for a couple of days to gather enough leads and calls for your team.

Then push from $300/day to $500/day. Evaluate again. This wave approach ensures you aren't overwhelmed on the back-end, and your cost data remains clear at each stage.

---

10. Action Steps for Part 6

1. Identify a campaign that's proven stable for at least 5–7 days.
2. Decide ABO or CBO strategy. For bigger budgets, try CBO.
3. Increase budget by 20–50% (or up to 2x if you're confident), watch 2–3 days. If performance holds, keep pushing.
4. Monitor audience size, frequency, cost per result. If cost rises too much, try fresh creative or open new audiences.

5. Do it in waves: Each wave of scale, let the system adapt, handle calls/leads, check show-up and close rates, then expand more if you want.

Coming Up Next (Part 7/10)

In Part 7, we'll focus on re-targeting and the concept of "Hammering Them" in more depth—ensuring those who watch part of your ads or visit your funnel but don't convert get continuous content until they're ready to buy.

Stay tuned: Once you're scaling, it's crucial not to lose potential leads who are on the fence. Retargeting can drastically improve conversions at this stage.

Key Quote Recap (from the transcript):

- "Don't just quadruple your ad budget in a day—costs can spike."
- "If you see your best ad set keep crushing, feed it more. If it breaks, revert or try duplication."
- "Be mindful of audience size. If you're saturating it, you'll see frequency jump and CPL climb."

End of Part 6. Next up: how to retarget effectively (the "Hammer Them" method) so every scaling dollar invests in re-capturing warm prospects who might have needed just one more push.

PART 7: ADVANCED AD MESSAGING & KEEPING CREATIVES FRESH

Now that you've successfully scaled your best ads, it's time to ensure they don't go stale. Even the most profitable hook eventually declines in performance if you never switch it up. This section covers how to iterate on your ads—tweaking the hook, environment, or proof—so you can continue capturing new attention and maximizing ROI.

---

1. Why You Can't "Set and Forget" Your Ads

- Ad Fatigue: After a few weeks (or months), the audience sees the same visuals or hears the same opening line, and performance gradually dips.
- Audience Changes: People's interests or financial situations evolve. If you keep the same creative forever, you miss new pockets of in-market leads.
- Rising Costs: As performance slips, your cost per lead/purchase creeps up—cutting profit.

Solution: Regularly refresh the hook or creative style while keeping your proven formula intact.

---

2. Rotate Beyond Your "Majority Hook"

From earlier parts, you likely found a "majority hook" that outperforms everything else. Over time, you'll want to test:

1. Second-Order Hooks:
    - Not quite as powerful as your #1 angle, but still resonant.
    - Example (real estate): "Earn 2–3x a normal rental's monthly cash flow with short-term rentals."
2. Minority Hooks:
    - Smaller, niche angles.
    - Example: "Use short-term rentals as a strategic way to cut your tax bill."

By layering in these sub-hooks, you'll reduce ad fatigue and potentially discover a new majority hook that can scale again.

---

3. Keep the Core Flow, Vary the First Seconds

3.1 The Power of "New Openers"

You can keep the same reasons/CTA (the core "body" of the script) while changing:

- Opening line: "Tired of [pain]?" → "Still stuck with [pain]? Let's fix that."
- Environment: Office vs. living room, outdoors near a property, or a simple walk-and-talk style on your phone.

Result: Audience sees it as a "brand new" video, but you're not reinventing the wheel.

3.2 Minimal Edits with Maximum Freshness

- Add text overlays or progress bars.
- Cut out fluff from your old 60s version to make it a 30s "quicker" version.
- Re-order a line or two (e.g., handle a major objection 10 seconds in instead of 25 seconds in).

---

4. Updating Proof & Testimonials

Fresh success stories or bigger numbers (e.g., you used to say "400 students," now it's "600") can reinvigorate the same ad structure:

1. Mention new data in the body: "Now we've helped 800 people do this."
2. Insert a snippet of new testimonial footage or a new screenshot.

3. Anchor the updated credibility: “We’re adding about 50 new success stories a month—here’s a quick look at the latest.”

Tip: Don’t bury watchers in a full 2-minute testimonial. Just 5–10 seconds of “Hey, it worked for me” can do wonders.

---

5. Using Seasonal or Topical Twists

Sometimes an external event or trend gives you a quick new angle:

- For Q4: “Cap off your best year in real estate with this short-term rental strategy.”
- Market Volatility: “The market’s in chaos, but my approach stands firm—here’s how.”

Even a 1-sentence mention at the start of the video can keep it feeling current—while 80% of the script remains the same.

---

6. Pulling Insights from Sales Calls

Your closers (or you, if you’re the closer) hear fresh phrases from prospects daily. This is gold for new short ads:

- Direct Quote: “A lot of people tell me: ‘I don’t have time for day trading. Any simpler approach?’ That’s exactly why I made this system…”
- Specific Fear: “Half our leads asked, ‘What if the market crashes next year?’ Let me tackle that in 30 seconds here…”

Key: Real prospects’ language resonates more than your internal marketing speak.

---

7. Testing Your Tweaks Quickly

1. Duplicate your best dynamic creative campaign.
2. Swap the new footage or revised openers in place of the old.
3. Keep a couple original winning variations as “control” versions.
4. Let it run for 3–5 days with moderate budget. Compare cost per lead/call.

If new angles do ~as well or better, great—scale them. If not, revert to your old set but keep iterating monthly.

---

8. The Micro-Splice & “Pattern Interrupts”

Just re-editing the same raw footage can create a “new” ad:

- Shorter Cuts: Chop a 45s video into a 25s version, cutting fluff.
- Pattern Interrupt: Insert comedic or abrupt visuals 5s in, or highlight text to jolt scrollers.
- Change Font/Colors: The same message with bigger, bolder text overlays might drastically improve thumb-stopping power.

You can keep the same script but re-package it for fresh engagement.

---

9. Maintaining a “Creative Calendar”

9.1 The 2–4 Week Cycle

- Every 2–4 weeks, check if your cost per lead/call is creeping up.
- If yes (or you suspect ad fatigue), plan 1–2 new angles or a simple refresh: new environment, updated proof, or seasonal mention.

9.2 Batch Shooting

- Film 2–4 short videos in one session, each 30–60 seconds.
- This stash can keep your ad library rolling for a month or more.

---

10. Action Steps for Part 7

1. Pick 1–2 second-order hooks or new angles.
2. Refresh your top ad with a changed opening line, environment, or updated proof.
3. Launch a test in dynamic creative, keeping a best performer as a control.
4. Check performance in 3–5 days. If stable or improved, scale. If worse, revert and try the next idea.

Coming Up Next (Part 8/10)

We'll cover advanced analytics and funnel data interpretation, so you can trace the entire user journey from ad to landing to booked call—and see if there's a leak in the funnel or if your ad itself needs a fix.

Stay tuned: By refreshing your creatives, you'll prevent ad fatigue and keep your cost per lead/call in a profitable sweet spot.

Key Quote Recap (in Jeremy's style):

- "No single ad kills it forever. Every 2–4 weeks, do a slight re-shoot or re-edit."
- "Focus on the first 3–5 seconds. That's everything."

- “If cost creeps, don’t panic—just rotate fresh angles or environment.”

End of Part 7. Next, we address how to track and analyze your entire funnel data so you can scale confidently, fix bottlenecks, and keep your direct response machine thriving.

PART 8: EXPANDING YOUR DIRECT RESPONSE AD FRAMEWORKS

---

1. Why Multiple Frameworks Matter

While you might have one go-to format for your direct response videos (short monologue camera-facing, for instance), there are other effective frameworks that can:

1. Capture new attention from different angles.
2. Prevent creative fatigue by varying the feel and style of your ads.
3. Serve different sub-segments of your audience who respond better to, say, a “demo style” vs. a “case study style.”

Bottom line: By rotating frameworks, you keep your messaging fresh without inventing an entirely new pitch.

---

2. Classic “Talking Head” + B-Roll Overlay

2.1 The Approach

- You speak directly to the camera in a single shot.

- Midway through, you overlay relevant B-roll (footage of you working, site visits, or quick text screens showing results).
- Return to talking head for the CTA.

2.2 Why It Works

- Personal Connection: They see your face, your expressions—builds trust.
- Variety in Visuals: The B-roll offers a pattern interrupt so viewers don't get bored.

2.3 Basic Sequence

1. Hook (talking head, direct camera)
2. Reasons with B-roll segments (e.g., showing results, homes, charts, etc.)
3. Return to Head for CTA.

---

3. "Case Study Snapshot" Ad

3.1 Structure

- Hook: "How did Tom go from X to Y in just 3 months?"
- Snapshot: Quick bullet or short footage of Tom praising your method or showing his "before vs. after."
- CTA: "Watch the same method Tom used. Click below."

3.2 Why It Works

- Social proof is front and center, and the hook is a real person's story.

- You can avoid “making it all about you” by shining the spotlight on a student/client.

Tip: Keep the “Case Study” portion short—15–30 seconds. Don’t let it become a full-blown testimonial. You still want to highlight the main direct response angle and CTA.

---

4. Demo or “Screencast” Framework

4.1 Perfect for Tech or Step-by-Step

- Hook: “3 steps I took on my laptop to earn an extra $3k a month.”
- Demo: Show your screen (or a simplified phone screen) doing the key steps.
- CTA: “Ready to replicate this? Click to see the detailed version.”

4.2 Why It Works

- If your audience loves quick “how-to” glimpses, seeing an actual process on-screen convinces them it’s real.
- This can be done with simple screen-recording + voiceover, or filming yourself while toggling between screen shots.

---

5. “Objection First” Framework

5.1 Approach

Flip the usual script: start with the biggest objection as the hook.

- Hook: “You think short-term rentals require massive time or capital? Let me prove you wrong.”

- Body: Address that single objection in 15–20 seconds, showing how your method counters it.

- CTA: “Interested? Click now to see the details or schedule a call.”

5.2 Why It Works

- Immediately tackles the #1 reason they’d scroll away.

- If you resolve it convincingly, they’ll keep watching to see your solution.

---

6. “Question & Answer” Style

6.1 Setup

- Another angle: Begin by reading or stating a user’s question.

- Hook: “A lot of people ask me, ‘Aren’t fix-and-flips riskier now?’ Let’s answer that.”

- Body: Provide a short, direct reply. Possibly use a quick anecdote or success snippet.

- CTA: “Got more questions? I answer them in my free mini-training—click below.”

6.2 Why It Works

- The Q&A style feels organic, as though you’re responding to real inquiries.

- Great for warm audiences, but also resonates with cold if the question is common enough.

---

7. 2-Person “Interview” or “Podium” Style

7.1 The Flow

1. Interviewer (friend, colleague, or actor) lobs questions: “You claim short-term rentals can double monthly net—explain that.”

2. You answer quickly, weaving your direct response points.

3. CTA: Interviewer might say, “So where can folks learn more?” You respond with the link.

7.2 Why It Works

- Breaking the “one-person monologue” pattern.

- Feels more “credible” if the interviewer is half-skeptical or clarifies the method from an everyday standpoint.

Note: Keep it short—30–60 seconds total. You don’t want a 5-minute interview ad. Micro-bites.

---

8. Skit or “Scenario” Framework

8.1 The Outline

- A quick role-play or comedic scenario that underscores your pitch.

- Hook: “Meet Sarah. She’s done with chaotic day-trading that robs her mornings.”

- Show Sarah fumbling or complaining, then you appear with a “solution.”

- CTA: “If you feel like Sarah, watch how we solved it in minutes.”

8.2 Why It Works

- Humor or mini-story stands out among typical feed ads.

- If done succinctly, it cements your solution as the “hero moment.”

Warning: This can flop if it’s too cheesy or long-winded. Keep it tight.

---

9. Blending Frameworks in Dynamic Creative

Since your platform likely supports multiple ad variations in a single campaign (via dynamic creative), you can:

1. Upload a talking-head angle, a Q&A snippet, and a case-study snippet.
2. Let the platform test which resonates best with each viewer.
3. Watch results. The platform might push the “Skit” style to certain subgroups, the “Talking Head + B-Roll” to others.

Result: You’re effectively using multiple frameworks at once to see what hits your ideal audience best.

---

10. Action Steps for Part 8

1. Pick at least 1 new format from the above list (like Q&A or a micro case study) to produce as your next ad variation.
2. Keep your proven “Hook → Body → CTA” structure. Just shift the “Body” to reflect the new style.
3. Film or edit it short (30–60 seconds max) to stay direct.
4. Test it in a dynamic campaign with your existing best performer to see if the new framework can match or beat your current cost per lead/call.

Coming Up Next (Part 9/10)

We'll explore workflow and team roles for ad creation—how to repeatedly generate these different frameworks, from scripting to final edit, whether you're solo or have a small production team.

Stay tuned: Mastering multiple frameworks ensures your direct response ads never grow stale, letting you pivot angles quickly and keep your audience engaged.

Key Quote Recap:

- "Switch frameworks, not just hooks. A short scenario or Q&A can re-engage people who ignore monologues."
- "Case study or screencast frameworks show real proof fast. People love seeing the process."
- "Always keep it short and direct—don't lose the direct response DNA of Hook → Body → CTA."

End of Part 8. Next, we'll streamline how you produce these frameworks consistently without overwhelming your schedule.

PART 9: STREAMLINING YOUR AD CREATION WORKFLOW

Your SOP so far covers scripting, hooks, and different frameworks. Now we'll ensure you can produce these ads on a regular schedule—without overwhelming yourself or a small team.

---

1. Why a Defined Workflow Matters

- Consistency: The direct response ad game thrives on fresh creative every 2–4 weeks.
- Efficiency: Having a set “who does what” and “when we shoot/edit” prevents delays.
- Scalability: As you grow, you might add more angles and frameworks—an organized process keeps quality high.

---

2. Example Ad Creation Team Roles

Whether you’re a solo operator or have a mini-team, the roles stay the same—just sometimes a single person wears multiple hats.

1. Copywriter/Scripter
    - Drafts or refines the Hook → Body → CTA.
    - Incorporates new angles, any fresh stats or testimonials.
2. On-Camera Talent
    - You or a spokesperson who can deliver lines confidently.
    - Possibly includes a second person for Q&A or interview frameworks.
3. Videographer or Editor
    - Handles filming or phone-camera capturing.
    - Edits for short, punchy videos—adding text overlays or B-roll.
4. Ad Manager (Uploader)
    - Actually places the final ad in the platform (Facebook, TikTok, YouTube).
    - Sets up dynamic creative, checks compliance, picks headlines, etc.

Solo? No Problem

- If you're alone: schedule "script day," "shoot day," and "edit day" or outsource editing.
- Track your tasks in a simple doc or project management tool.

---

3. Pre-Production: Scripting & Planning

3.1 Brainstorm & Script Outline

- List your new hook(s), the main reason(s), and the CTA.
- Decide the framework: e.g., "Objection-first," "Case study snippet," "Talking head + B-roll," etc.
- Write a brief bullet script or exact lines—whichever you prefer.

3.2 Gather Props or Visuals (If Needed)

- If you plan B-roll, decide what you'll shoot (screens, property visits, quick desk shots).
- For an interview format, prep 2–3 questions.

Key: Keep it minimal. Overcomplicating sets or props can stall you.

---

4. Production: Recording the Ad

1. Allocate a short block of time (1–2 hours).
2. Film multiple variations in one session:
    - Variation 1: Standard talking head (1 environment).

    - Variation 2: Slightly different opener, same environment.
    - Variation 3: Possibly a second environment or angle if time permits.

3. Keep Takes Short: If you fluff a line, simply re-do quickly. Overly polished can feel less authentic.

Pro Tip: For phone filming, ensure stable lighting, minimal background noise, and hold the phone at eye level or use a simple stand.

---

5. Post-Production: Editing & Polishing

5.1 Editing Basics

- Cut out long pauses or stumbles.
- Insert text overlays for your main points or an important stat.
- (Optional) Add B-roll for ~30–50% of the video if relevant.

5.2 Tools

- Mobile Apps: InShot, CapCut if you’re doing it from your phone.
- Desktop: Final Cut Pro, Premiere Pro, or DaVinci Resolve. Keep it simple.

Remember: 30–60 seconds is your sweet spot for most direct response ads.

---

6. Approval & Finalizing

If you have a small team:

1. Copy Check: Make sure disclaimers or claims align with compliance.

2. Talent Check: On-camera person or interviewer might want to watch the final cut.

3. Manager Check: The ad manager ensures the final file is correct, short, and name-labeled for easy uploading.

Solo: Do a quick final watch to confirm it's on-message, no embarrassing mistakes.

---

7. Upload & Dynamic Creative Setup

Once you have, say, 2–3 new variations:

1. Name them distinctly (e.g., "[OfferName]_CaseStudyHook_V1").

2. Upload to Facebook Ads Manager (or other platforms) with dynamic creative toggled on.

3. Choose 2–3 headlines, 2–3 copy variations, and these new videos in the same ad set.

4. Publish and watch performance over ~3–5 days.

---

8. The 2–4 Week Cycle

Repeat the entire process every 2–4 weeks or whenever:

1. Costs creep up.

2. Your sales team needs a fresh angle for new sub-demographics.

3. You want to test a new approach or hook.

Consistent short filming sessions plus quick editing is the secret sauce to an ongoing ad pipeline.

---

9. Batch Shooting & Re-Edits

9.1 Batch Shooting

- Once a month, block half a day to film 4–6 short ads.
- Each might have a different hook or environment tweak.
- You'll have enough new creative for 4–6 weeks.

9.2 Re-Edits

- If an existing ad is strong, just re-edit the first 5 seconds or change the B-roll.
- "New" enough for the platform to treat it differently, but no heavy lifting for you.

---

10. Action Steps for Part 9

1. Create a simple ad production checklist:
    - Script → Film → Edit → Approve → Upload.
2. Book monthly or bi-weekly slots in your calendar for ad filming.
3. Decide which frameworks (Part 7) you'll produce this cycle.
4. Plan your post-production approach (who or what tool).
5. Publish systematically, track results, and do it again in 2–4 weeks.

Coming Up Next (Part 10/10)

We'll wrap up the entire SOP with a concise recap of the major steps, best practices, and final tips for consistent success. By internalizing these final guidelines, you'll ensure your direct response ad creation remains profitable and adaptable long-term.

Key Quote Recap:

- "Schedule short, repeatable sessions for new ad angles—don't wing it."
- "Whether you're solo or with a small team, clarify who writes, who films, who edits, who uploads."
- "Batch shooting 4–6 short variations a month keeps you always fresh."

End of Part 9. Next (Part 10): We conclude with an overall summary and top do's/don'ts to seal in your direct response ad mastery.

PART 10: FINAL SUMMARY & BEST PRACTICES

---

1. Brief Recap of the Entire SOP

1. Part 1: Established the basic structure of direct response ads (Hook → Reasons → CTA) and why short, punchy video ads are critical.
2. Part 2: Showed how to identify and speak directly to in-market prospects who already want your offer.
3. Part 3: Covered dynamic creative testing, letting you load multiple videos/headlines and trust the platform to find the best combo.

4. Part 4: Focused on refining ad messaging so your funnel or next step in the user flow matches the ad's promise (without diving deep into funnel details).

5. Part 5: Emphasized objection handling in the ad script – tackling time, cost, or trust issues upfront.

6. Part 6: Discussed scaling your winning ads safely (incremental budget raises, duplications) while watching performance.

7. Part 7: Addressed advanced ad messaging plus refreshing or iterating on your successful angles to prevent ad fatigue.

8. Part 8: Introduced additional frameworks (Q&A style, case study snippet, demo screencast, etc.) to diversify how you deliver Hook → Reasons → CTA.

9. Part 9: Detailed a workflow approach for consistently producing new ads (scripting, filming, editing, uploading) on a 2–4 week cycle.

Now, let's finalize your best practices so you have a crisp blueprint going forward.

---

2. Top 10 Best Practices for Direct Response Ad Creation

1. Focus on the First 5 Seconds

    - A strong hook or pattern interrupt is everything. If watchers drop off, the rest doesn't matter.

2. Speak Directly to "In Market"

    - Assume they already believe in your overall category. Show them why your method is the best, not why the category itself is valid.

3. Handle the #1 Objection Early

    - If time, cost, or trust is the biggest friction, tackle it by second 15–20 in your script.

4. Use Multiple Frameworks
    - Rotate from “talking head + B-roll” to “case study snippet” to “demo style,” so your feed presence stays fresh.
5. Short & Punchy
    - 30–60 seconds hits the sweet spot for most direct response video ads. Longer can work, but risk losing watchers.
6. Leverage Social Proof
    - Quick testimonials or before/after stats keep watchers believing it’s real. Weave them into your “Reasons” section.
7. Dynamic Creative for Variation
    - Provide multiple videos, headlines, copy blocks. Let the platform serve the best combos for each viewer.
8. Refresh Every 2–4 Weeks
    - Even proven winners fatigue. Slightly change the hook opener or environment, or test a sub-hook.
9. Scale Gradually
    - Once you find a strong cost per lead/purchase, raise budgets by 20–50% or clone the campaign. Watch carefully for cost creep.
10. Consistency & Team Workflow

- Schedule regular scripting + filming. If you’re solo, block time monthly to churn out a few short ads. If you have a team, define roles.

---

3. Common Pitfalls (And Quick Fixes)

- Overly Long Ads: People drop fast. Cut down to the essentials.
- Ignoring Hook: Don't bury your best line 10 seconds in—lead with it.
- Generic or "Mass Market" Copy: Wastes budget on the "needs convinced" crowd, driving up costs. Tailor ads to the buyer who's ready now.
- Underusing Social Proof: Mention stats, quick screenshots, or 1-liner testimonials mid-ad.
- No Variation: Sticking to one ad until it dies. Refresh or test a second framework sooner.

---

4. Quick "Ad Creation" Checklist

1. Outline: Identify the hook, the main reason(s), the CTA, and 1–2 objections or proof points.
2. Script: Decide the style (talking head, case study snippet, Q&A, etc.). Write or bullet a short script.
3. Shoot: Keep it to 1–2 minutes raw footage max per variation. Possibly gather B-roll.
4. Edit: Trim fluff, add text overlays or transitions, ensure strong opening.
5. Upload: Dynamic creative with 2–3 headlines + 2–3 body copy texts.
6. Track: Evaluate cost per lead or cost per purchase over 3–5 days.
7. Decide: Scale if stable, revert or refine if cost spikes.

5. Final Words

Direct response ads thrive on clarity, specific hooks, and constant iteration. You'll repeatedly cycle through new angles, fresh visuals, updated testimonials—and keep your cost per lead or sale in a profitable range.

Keep it short, direct, and relevant to your best buyers, and you'll see consistent returns from your direct response ad campaigns.

Key Quote Recap:

- "A direct response ad is never a one-and-done. It's a monthly or bi-monthly iteration."
- "Speak to the in-market crowd, handle their top friction, prove it's real, and lead them to the CTA."
- "Show your face, show their successes, show your method—over and over."

End of Part 10. You now have a complete framework for creating direct response video ads consistently—from hooking the right prospects to refreshing and scaling. Use these final guidelines to maintain high-performing ads that drive real ROI for your business.
