Made For...

Personal Brands, High Ticket Product Or Service Businesses, Companies That Raise Capital, Ecommerce Stores, Lead Gen Businesses, and Anyone with High Quality Social Media Content That Wants To Generate As Many Qualified Leads And Sales Per Day As Possible.

Introduction

If you're running paid ads and generating leads, but struggling with low show rates and sales conversions, long sales cycles, etc - it's because you're failing to frame your leads successfully prior to the sales call or purchase decision occurring. You're leaving questions they have for the sales call, and likely failing to get them excited and sold before the call occurs.

It's a common problem that frustrates even the most seasoned marketers and sales teams. But what if I told you there was a way to virtually guarantee your leads show up to calls probable to buy? That's exactly what the "Hammer Them" ad strategy is designed to do.

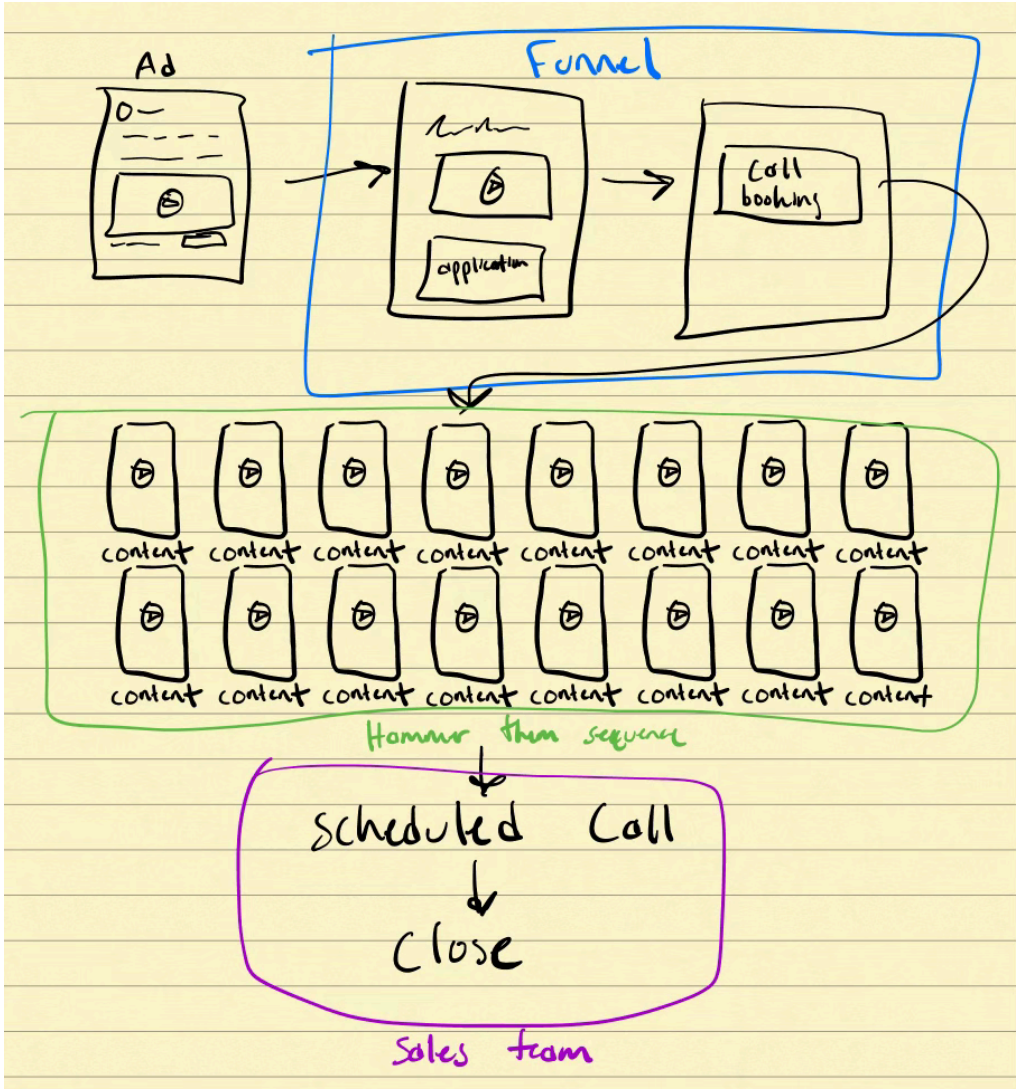
This content retargeting approach leverages the power of high-frequency, contextual content marketing to pre frame objections, build trust, and prime your leads to eagerly hand over their credit card come time of the call.

By strategically "hammering" prospects with 15-20+ pieces of hyper-relevant content in the critical 72-hour window before a sales call, you'll watch your show rates and conversions skyrocket. You also typically see more pay in fulls, shorter sales cycles, and better feedback from the sales team on lead quality.



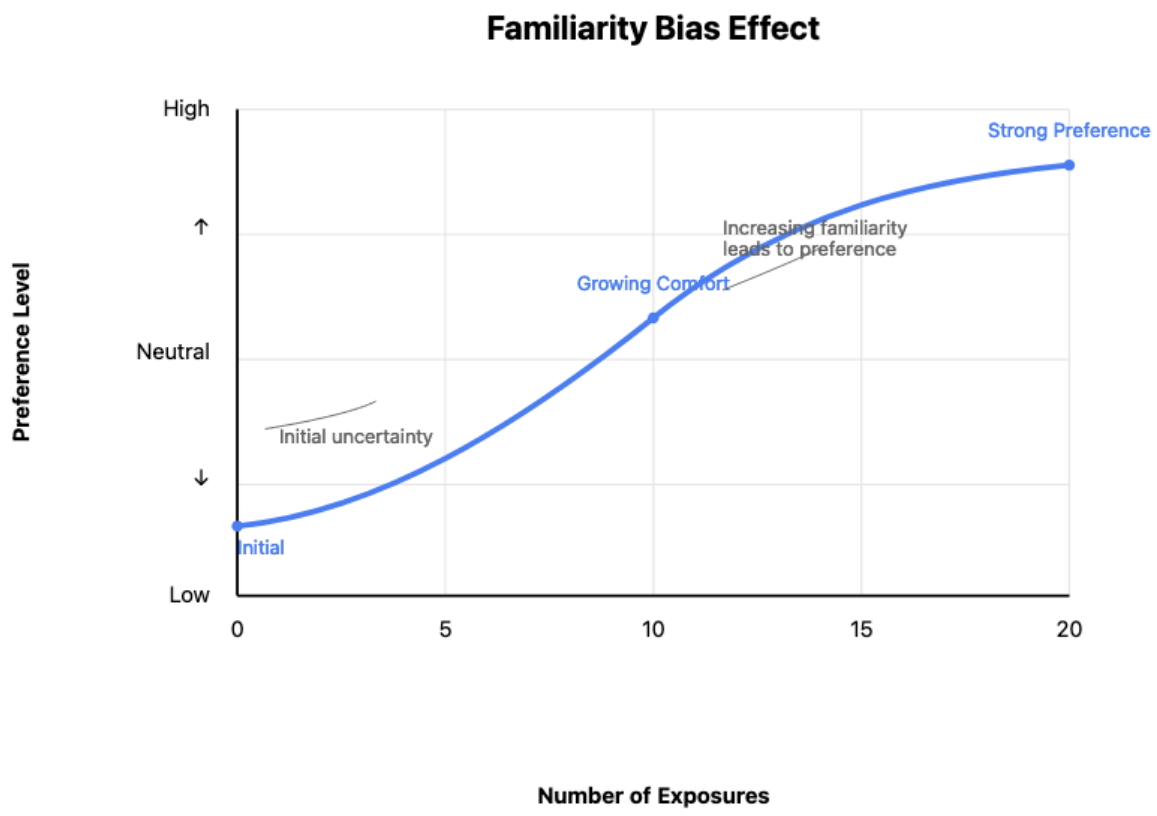
In this guide, we'll explore the psychological principles behind the strategy, break down the key content categories to focus on, and walk through a detailed campaign setup in Ads Manager. By the end, you'll have a proven framework for transforming your retargeting game and filling your calendar with red-hot, ready-to-buy leads.

But fair warning: this strategy isn't for the people who suck at making content, you have to be great at that part. It takes work, commitment, and a willingness to put yourself out there. If you're ready to roll up your sleeves and do what it takes, keep reading. If not, there's nothing wrong with sticking to the status quo direct response and basic email reminders you have now - but don't be surprised when you keep losing money or running on thin ROAS margins.

Why The Hammer Them Strategy Works

The Hammer Them strategy is incredibly effective at boosting show rates and sales conversions due to several key psychological principles and mechanisms at play.

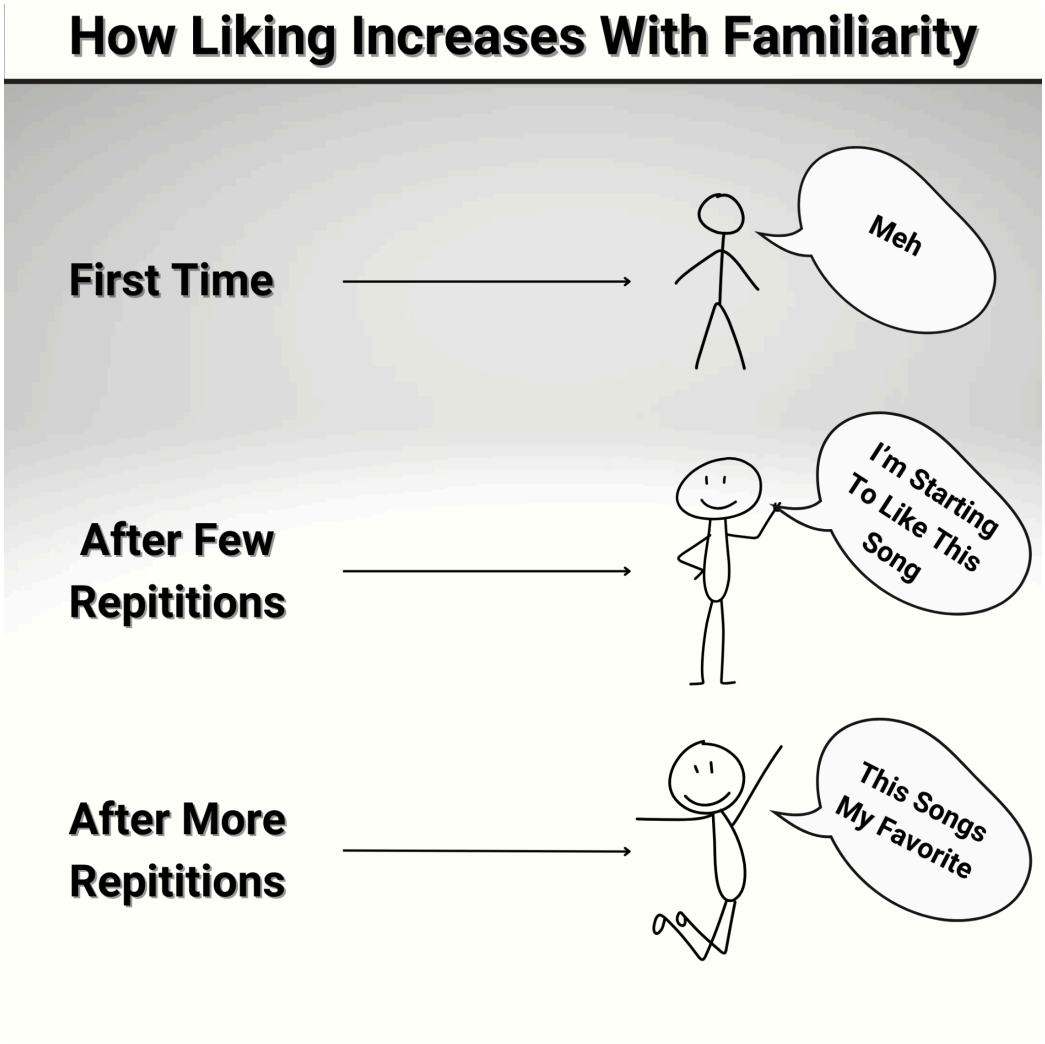
Reason 1: Familiarity Bias



One of the core reasons this approach works so well is due to the familiarity bias. As humans, we have a natural tendency to prefer and trust things that we're exposed to repeatedly. By delivering a high volume of valuable, relevant content to your leads in the days leading up to the sales call, you're leveraging this bias to your advantage.

With each piece of content they consume, their familiarity with and trust in your brand grows stronger. Even if they don't consciously engage with every single piece, the mere fact that they're seeing your name, your face, and your message over and over again is subconsciously building that vital trust and rapport that's so crucial for sales conversions.

Reason 2: Mere-Exposure Effect



Closely related to the familiarity bias is the mere-exposure effect. This psychological phenomenon states that people tend to develop a preference and trust for things simply because they are familiar with them. In other words, the more we're exposed to something, the more we tend to like it.

By bombarding your leads with a high frequency of content touchpoints in a short timeframe, you're capitalizing on this effect. Even if they don't click on or consciously consume every piece, the sheer repetition of exposure is increasing their affinity and trust in your brand.

Reason 3: Selling The Next Step vs. The End Result

Another key factor that makes the Hammer Them approach so powerful is that you're not necessarily selling the end result or the product itself in your content. Instead, you're selling the next step - showing up to the sales call.

By focusing your content on building trust, providing value, and addressing objections and concerns related to taking that next step, you're removing barriers and increasing the likelihood that leads will show up to the call. You're making the act of attending the sales conversation feel like a natural, logical, and low-risk action.

This is a much more effective approach than trying to sell them on the entire offer or end result upfront. You're meeting them where they are in their journey and guiding them towards the desired action one step at a time. Just like your organic sales process.

Reason 4: Objection Handling and Question Answering

A significant portion of your Hammer Them content should be dedicated to proactively addressing the most common questions, concerns, and objections that your leads typically have. By doing this before the sales call even takes place, you're preempting potential roadblocks and smoothing the path to conversion.

When you provide clear, thorough, and persuasive answers to their key questions and objections upfront, leads come into the sales conversation feeling more informed, more confident, and more ready to engage. They're less likely to bring up those sticking points on the call, because you've already handled them in your content.

This not only increases show rates by removing doubts and building trust, but also makes the sales conversation itself more efficient and effective. Instead of getting bogged down in overcoming objections, you can focus on deepening the relationship and guiding them towards a buying decision.

The Net Effect: More Shows, More Sales

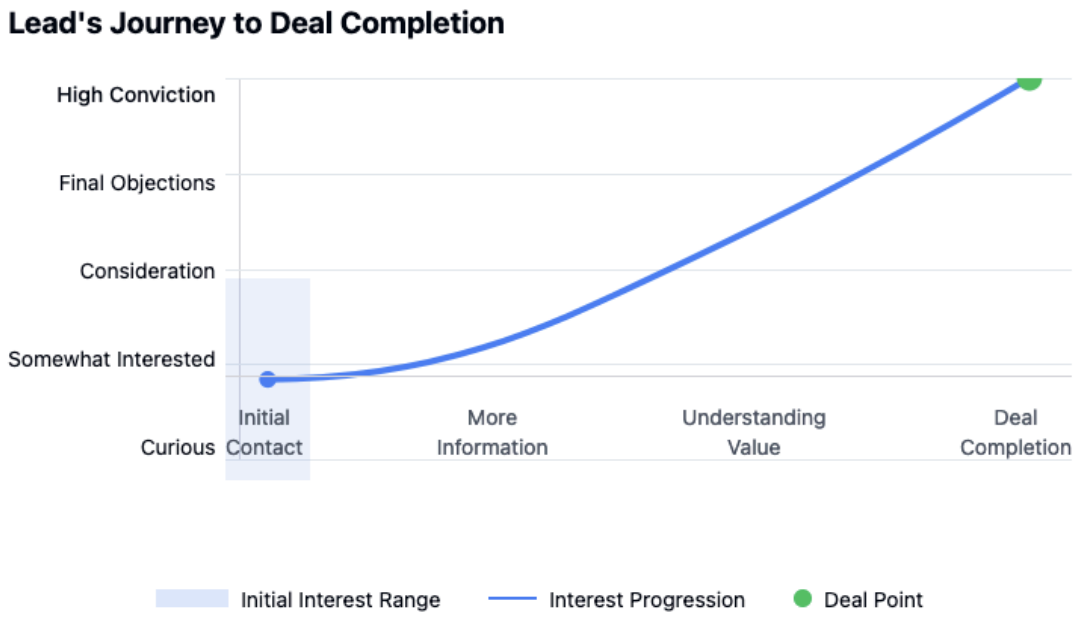
When you put all of these psychological principles and strategic elements together, the net effect is a significant boost in both show rates and sales conversions.

Leads are more likely to show up to the call because you've built familiarity and trust, provided upfront value, sold them on taking the next step, and preemptively handled their objections and concerns. And when they do show up, they're more primed and ready to buy because of the groundwork you've laid with your content.

Of course, for this approach to work, your content itself needs to be top-notch. It needs to be relevant, valuable, and persuasive, strategically crafted to address the specific needs, desires, and blockers of your target audience.

But when you nail that content and deploy it using the Hammer Them framework, the results can be game-changing. You'll see more leads eagerly showing up to sales calls, more of those calls converting into customers, and more revenue generated from your marketing efforts.

It's a powerful way to optimize your sales process, boost your key metrics, and ultimately grow your business faster and more efficiently. And best of all, it's a repeatable, scalable system that you can implement again and again to keep your pipeline full and your sales team busy.



The 4 Pillars of High-Converting Content

To execute the Hammer Them strategy effectively, you need to create content that tackles four key areas: Questions, Questions Arising from Initial Questions getting answered (2nd layer questions), Objections, and Expectations. Let's break each one down and explore how to craft effective content for each pillar.

All pieces of content are short, direct, vertical videos optimized for reels ideally that get posted straight onto your IG page and cross posted to FB.

Pro tip, do not use copyrighted music when organically posting them, otherwise you won't be able to use the content via paid engagement campaigns.

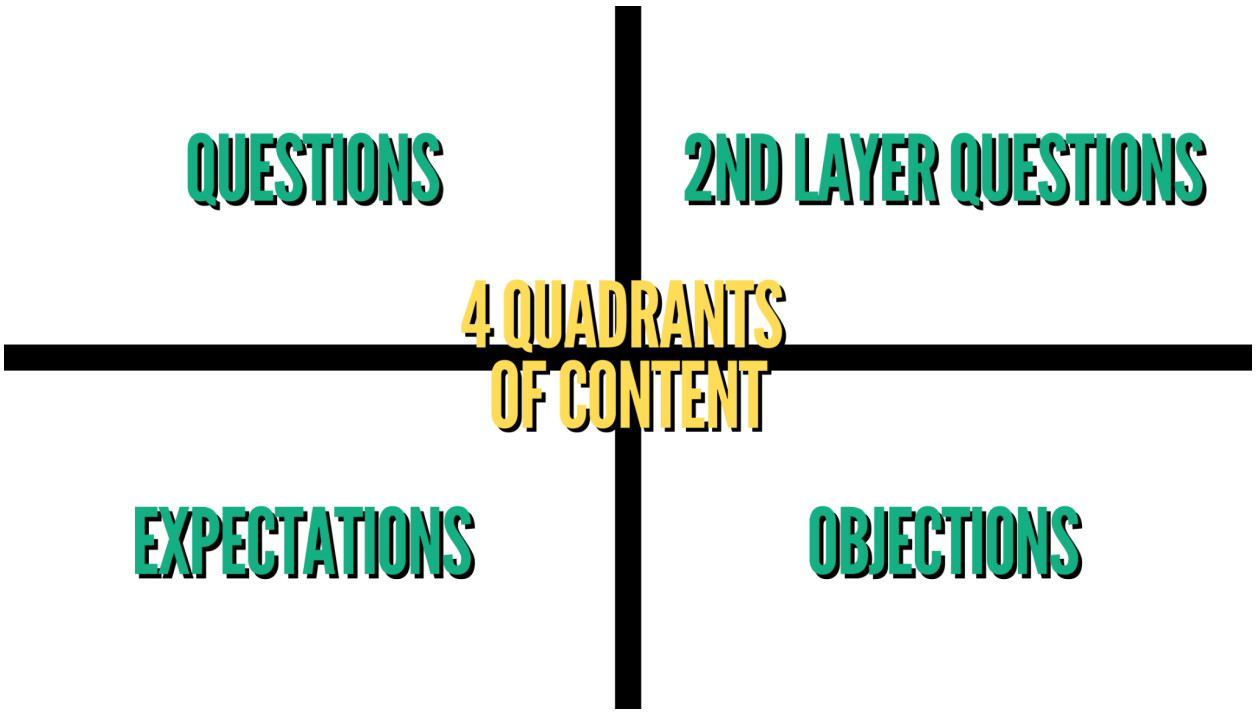
a Digital Agency



Pillar 1: Questions

First and foremost, your content needs to address the most common and critical questions your target audience has about your product, service, or offer. These are the general questions about how everything works, the make-or-break factors that determine whether they'll even consider doing business with you.

To identify these questions, put yourself in your lead's perspective. What would you need to know that would help sell you on showing up to a call? What information would be essential to build trust and convince you that it's worth your time? Some common examples might include:

- What is the overarching reason you are selling what you are selling?
- How does this compare to other alternatives on the market?
- What makes this company/offer unique or superior?
- If there's any key talking points in your VSL that you want to ensure people understand, you can also make break away pieces of content for that.
- Who is the offer you're selling best for?
- Essentially any questions that your sales team is getting frustrated having to answer on sales calls that they think should already be answered, do that.

Your mission is to create content that tackles these foundational questions and whatever other initial general questions come up in your sales process head-on, providing clear, comprehensive, and compelling answers.

Use a mix of data, social proof, storytelling, and concrete examples to satisfy their curiosity and position your offer as the obvious solution.

Pillar 2: 2nd Layer Questions

Answering those initial key questions is a critical first step, but it's rarely the end of the journey. Savvy prospects will inevitably have follow-up questions that arise from your initial explanations.

Failing to anticipate and address these second-layer inquiries can derail your sales process and cause high no show rates or even worse, your sales people having to actually sell on sales calls by answering these questions they would have otherwise thought leads should have already known about.

For example, if you've created content explaining how your coaching program helps clients achieve a specific result, the natural follow-up questions might be:

- What specific strategies or techniques do you teach to achieve that outcome?
- Can you walk me through the step-by-step process of how it works?
- What level of support or accountability do you provide along the way?
- How long does it typically take for clients to see results?

My favorite broad example is:

1st question: why do new yorkers always say their bagels and pizza are better?
1st answer: the water is better.

2nd question: what do you mean the water is better?
2nd answer: the low concentrations of calcium and magnesium, which make it softer.

See what I mean? You're left unsatisfied if you just get the first answer, the second question getting asked and answered is where you are left satisfied and in understanding.

Same thing happens all the time in a sales process where a 1st layer of questions gets answered that then creates a 2nd layer of questions that need follow up answers to create the understanding. And yes, you can handle both in the same video.

Your job is to proactively identify these secondary questions and craft content that dives deeper into the details. Think of it as peeling back the layers of the onion, providing increasingly granular and specific information to fully satisfy their curiosity and build the right perspective on your product or service.

Pillar 3: Objections

No matter how compelling your offer or how well you've answered prospects' questions, there will always be objections that arise during the sales process. These are the lingering doubts, concerns, and mental roadblocks that prevent leads from taking action, even when they're convinced of your value.

Remembering that the goal of the Hammer Them strategy is to turn your sales people into the cashiers they desperately want to be rather than having to sell. We can start to understand why objections would need to be preframed and handled prior to a sales call so the sales people have an easier time closing deals.

Common objections tend to revolve around themes like price, time investment, skepticism about results, and comparisons to competitors. For example:

- The price is too high - I can't afford this right now.
- I'm not sure I have the time to fully commit to this program.
- How do I know this will actually work for me, specifically?
- I've tried similar solutions in the past and haven't gotten results.
- XYZ competitor offers something similar for a lower price.

Your content must confront these objections directly and indirectly through story telling resulting in you handling them one by one. Use a combination of logic, evidence, and emotional persuasion to reframe their concerns and help them see your offer in a new light.

For example, if price is a common sticking point, you might create content that:

- Breaks down the true cost of not solving their problem (financial, emotional, opportunity costs)
- Reframes the price as an investment rather than an expense, with a clear ROI

- Offers flexible payment plans or financing options to make it more accessible
- Uses customer success stories to showcase the life-changing value of your solution

The key is to normalize and validate their concerns, while simultaneously providing a compelling counterargument that shifts their perspective.

Pillar 4: Expectations

Finally, your content must shape prospects' expectations for what success with your product or service looks like. Many times, leads come into the sales process with misaligned or unrealistic notions about the timeline, effort, or results they can achieve. It's your job to gently reset those expectations and paint a clear, realistic picture of the journey ahead.

This might include content that:

- Clearly outlines the steps and milestones of your process
- Sets realistic timelines for progress and results
- Specifies the level of effort and commitment required from the client
- Shares relatable success stories that showcase the full arc of the customer journey
- Paints a vivid picture of the end result and transformation they can expect

By proactively shaping expectations, you're setting leads up for success and avoiding disappointment or frustration down the line. When they have a clear and accurate understanding of what's involved, they're far more likely to show up ready to do the work and stick with it for the long haul.

Putting It All Together

To truly hammer your leads with trust-building, objection-shattering content, you need to weave together all four of these pillars into a cohesive content strategy.

Every piece you create should serve a specific purpose, whether it's answering a burning question, diving into nitty-gritty details, busting through a common objection, or painting a vivid picture of success. By strategically mapping out your content to hit all these key areas, you'll create an airtight argument for your offer that leaves no stone unturned.

Remember, the goal isn't just to bludgeon leads into submission - it's to genuinely educate, inspire, and persuade them. When you approach your content with a spirit of service and a commitment to delivering massive value, you'll find that the sale becomes a natural byproduct of the trust and relationship you've built.

Rolling Out The Hammer - Your Step-By-Step Campaign Setup

Video Explainer going through how to do the technical set up for the Hammer Them strategy: https://jeremy-inc.wistia.com/medias/laj85zxbdn

Software - Hammer Them Helper: https://www.hammerthemstrategy.com/campaign

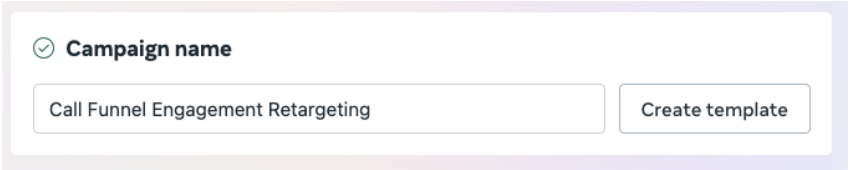
Step 1: Build Your Campaign Foundation

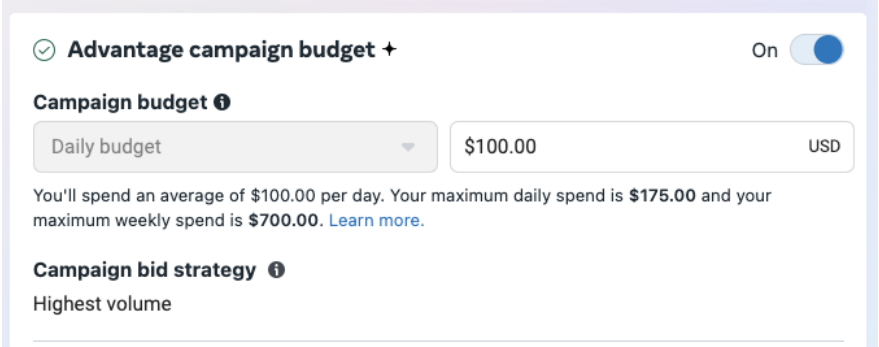
Open Facebook Ads Manager and click the all-powerful green "Create" button.

Choose the "Engagement" objective, as our primary goal is capturing attention and building video views with the thruplay optimization on the ad set level.

Name your campaign something clear and specific, like "Hammer Them - [Your Offer/Audience]".

Flip on Campaign Budget Optimization and set a healthy daily budget - we recommend at least $50/day for smaller audiences and $100+/day for larger ones. The budget is more defined by the frequency of 15-20+ in 72 hours being achieved, increased until achieved.

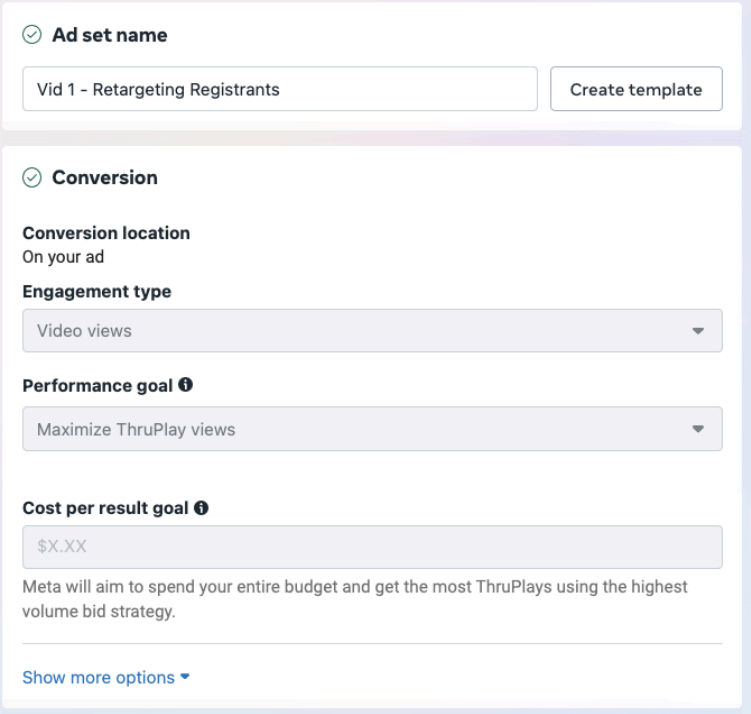




Step 2: Pinpoint Your Target Audience

At the ad set level, name your first set "VID 1 - retargeting X audience" (you'll duplicate this later for each content piece).

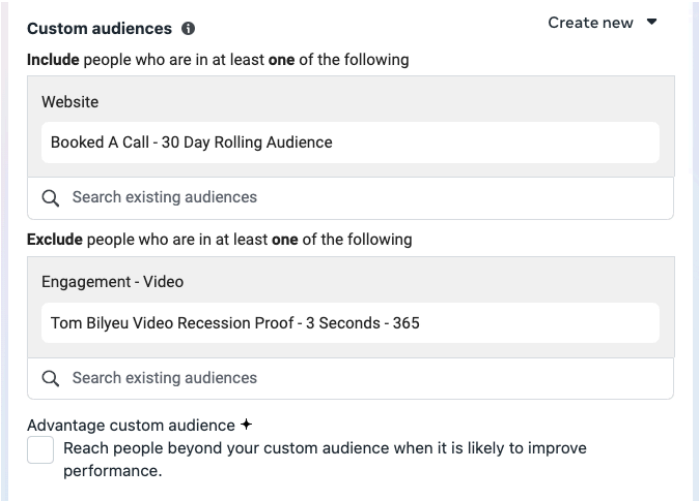
Select "Video Views" as your optimization goal and "Thru Play" as the type, signaling to Facebook that you want leads consuming your content in full.



Most importantly, define your target audience - whether it's recent leads who booked a call but didn't have their call yet, DMs who are talking to setters actively, people who just showed up to a call but didn't buy yet or any other relevant group you want to hammer.

You just have to have 100 people minimum in your target audience, and ideally that window is tight, if not broaden it out with a further time frame for that same audience.

Double-check that the "Expand Audience" option is disabled to ensure laser-focused targeting only towards your desired retargeting audience.



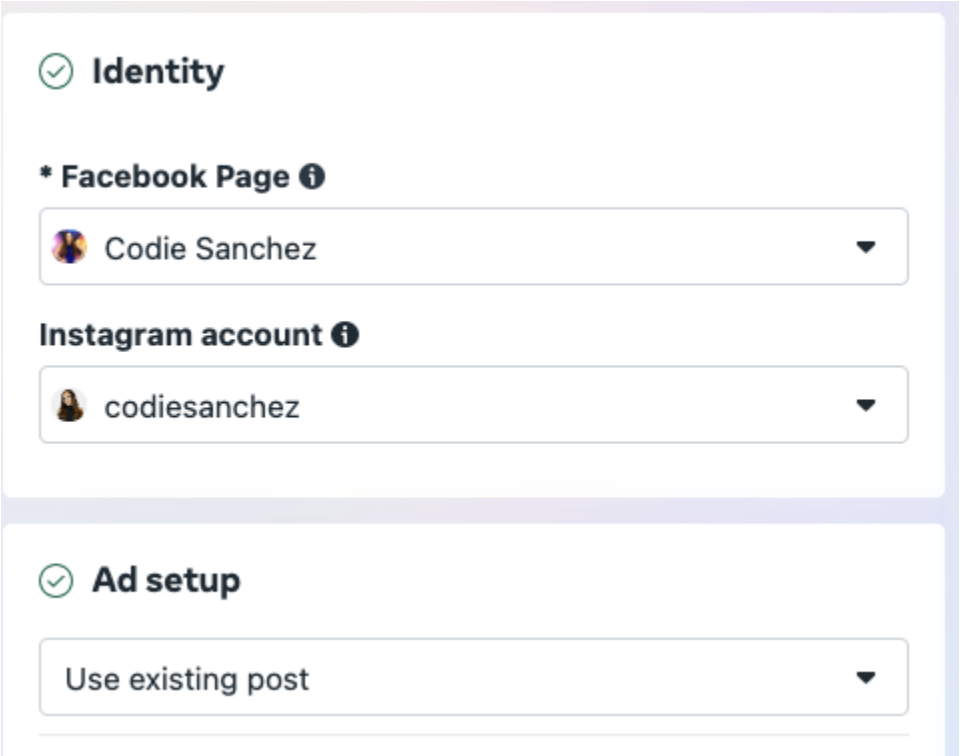
Step 3: Choose Your Content

If your content is distributed on both Facebook and Instagram, allow Facebook to automatically decide placements for maximum impact. Just be sure to exclude the audience network, it's trash. If you're only rocking with Instagram, manually select Feed, Stories, Profile and Explore placements for the full Monty.

You'll have 1 piece of content selected per ad set. Ideally you post the content to your instagram page directly, and cross post it to Facebook that way on the ad level of the campaign you can select "existing post" and use a post on your page.

Pro tip, if you post your reels with copyrighted music you will not be able to use it for paid ads in these engagement campaigns.

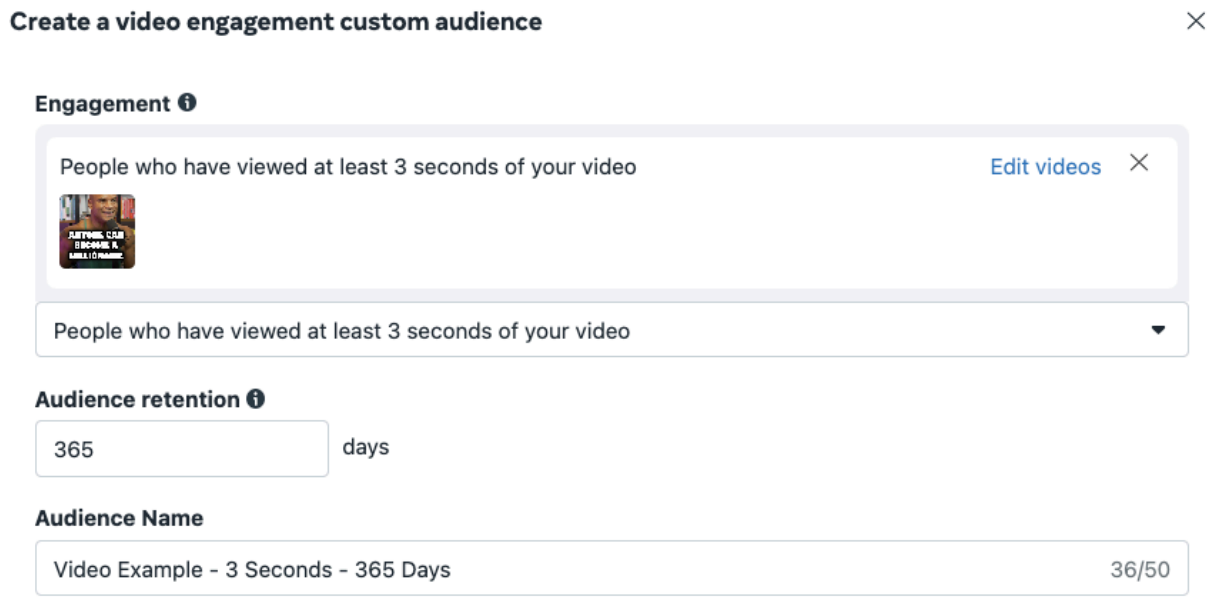
Select the "Use Existing Post" option and choose whatever video from your content arsenal is ot be used.



Step 4: Lock And Load Your Exclusion Audiences

This is where the magic happens. To ensure leads don't get pummeled by the same content repeatedly, we're going to create a 3 second video view Custom Audience for each video.

Head to the Audiences tab and select "Video" as your source. Choose people who've watched at least 3 seconds in the past year, and repeat the process for each piece of content that is going to be used in your hammer them content strategy, using clear naming conventions like "VID 1 [Name] | 3 Sec View" for easy management.



Step 5: Duplicate And Repeat

Duplicate that "VID 1" ad set for each additional content piece, renaming them accordingly and swapping out the video at the ad level.

Critically, make sure each new ad set excludes the 3-second view audience for the new video within that newly duplicated ad set. This guarantees that each lead gets hit with a fresh piece of content until they've seen your entire arsenal.

You should ideally have 30-50 pieces of content here for maximum hammering. Meaning you'll have 30-50 unique ad sets within this campaign total.

Megalodon Marketing
a Digital Agency

Step 6: Assess And Adapt

With your campaign locked and loaded, keep a close eye on those "Frequency" and "Reach" metrics.

You want to see a high frequency, indicating leads are getting hit with multiple pieces of content in rapid succession. Ideal frequency is between 15-20+ within 72 hours, adjust budget up or down accordingly to based on that metric being met or not. The more content that reaches someone in these tight windows, the better the result.

If frequency is low, your hammer isn't swinging hard enough - crank up the budget, tighten the audience, or evaluate your content hooks. You should be aiming for a minimum of 15-20 content exposures per lead within the key timeframes.

Final step: Publish the campaign

You should ideally have a campaign optimized for CBO (campaign budget optimization) with $100-$200/day in budget, with 25-50 individual ad sets within it, each containing a unique piece of content and on the ad set level a single 3 second video exclusion audience that prevents people who watch 3 seconds of that video within the ad set from ever seeing it again to ensure they get rotated over to other pieces of content. The audience being targeted should be the key tight time frame audience that needs framing material the most like people who just booked a call, people who just DM'd and started conversations with setters, people who just showed up for a call and didn't buy yet, etc.

You should also ensure that the content is just content, there's no call to actions in content, it's just content meant to help with framing.

And just like that, you've got a ruthlessly effective content delivery machine that shatters objections, builds trust, and has leads excited to hop on a call. Wield this power wisely, and watch your show rates and conversions go up. You should also see and hear feedback from the closing team change to leads being more warm compared to prior times without the hammer them enabled.

Gauging The Impact And Optimizing

With your Hammer Them campaign up and running, you need to vigilantly track the right metrics to ensure it's delivering at the frequency necessary for impact. Here are the key indicators to watch:

Show Up & Close Rates

The ultimate measure of this strategy's potency is how it moves the needle on your show up and close rates. Keep a focus on these numbers in the weeks following your campaign launch. If you're not seeing a marked improvement in both the percentage of booked calls that hold and the percentage of those calls that convert to sales, it's time to investigate and optimize.

Frequency & Reach

As mentioned earlier, your "Frequency" and "Reach" columns in Ads Manager are your north star. Frequency reflects the average number of times each lead was exposed to your content, while Reach indicates how many unique leads were hit.

Ideally, you want Frequency numbers of 15-20+, demonstrating that leads are getting a concentrated dose of content in a compressed window. If Frequency is low, your hammer isn't hitting hard enough - pour more fuel on the fire with increased budget or consider tightening up your audience.

Relevance Scores

Facebook's Relevance Score is a handy barometer for how well your content is striking a chord with your target audience. Scores of 7 and above are the promised land - they mean your content is really landing well. If certain videos are falling flat with low scores, it's time to potentially retire them and swap in some fresh, hard-hitting material IF the content doesn't have high retention in the video view breakdown column.

Return on Ad Spend

The only metric that truly matters is profitability. Are the gains in show rates and conversions generating enough additional revenue to justify your ad spend? Keep a vice-like grip on your Customer Acquisition Costs and Lifetime Values. If your ROAS is looking poor, you may need to cut back or double down and optimize until you hit the sweet spot.

Boots-on-the-Ground Intel

Data is indispensable, but don't overlook the importance of qualitative feedback from your sales team and customers. Are your reps reporting a positive difference in lead quality and buying intent? Are new customers excited about specific pieces of content that really struck a nerve? These frontline insights are pure gold for guiding your ongoing content optimizations.

Look, mastering the Hammer Them strategy isn't a one-and-done proposition. It's an iterative, ongoing process that demands relentless optimization and a willingness to experiment. The key is to stay agile, attentive, and responsive to the signals your campaign is sending. Analyze the data, gather qualitative intel, and continuously adapt your approach to deliver the most potent, impactful content mix possible.

Incorporating Long Form Content into the Hammer Them Strategy

Training video on adding long form to the Hammer Them strategy:
https://jeremy-inc.wistia.com/medias/rkhnkjv6t2

Why Long Form is Back on the Rise

Over recent years, short form content (e.g., 15–90 second Reels, TikToks, YouTube Shorts) has dominated. It still is, by sheer volume. Yet, long form consumption is steadily becoming essential in a sophisticated buyer's journey.

- Pendulum Concept: In the book Pendulum, Roy H. Williams and Michael R. Drew highlight how human behavior swings between extremes—sometimes, we crave quick hits of short form content; other times, we want depth. We're entering (or arguably already in) a phase where depth and thoroughness are more crucial to close the sale.
- Binge Behavior: Our data shows that well over half of closed deals these days involve leads self-consuming longer content—sometimes hours of it—before ever buying. They "binge" to feel confident: "Okay, these people know their stuff. I trust them."

In other words, short form alone will warm leads to a point of awareness, but it often stops short of giving them complete safety in the buying decision. By weaving in strategic long form, you provide that extra "deep dive" that reduces friction and shortens the final close time.

How Long Form Fits with Short Form

Remember the original Hammer Them approach:

1. Direct Response: You let the person book a call, fill out a form, or opt in (or you lead them from your funnel to a call).
2. Hammer Them with Short Form: Immediately afterward, you begin retargeting them with 30+ short form videos addressing your top Q&As, objections, second-layer questions, and expectations.

Now we add a Long Form layer so that those who want it (and many will) can binge deeper insights before they speak with your sales team. The difference is in why short form vs. long form exist:

- Short Form: Rapidly builds familiarity and ensures they see multiple angles (15–20+ impressions in 72 hours). They arrive at a call or conversion event more aware.

- Long Form: Provides safety and more advanced depth. It answers bigger or more complex questions, reveals your unique method in detail, and shows actual experience in a thorough way.

Key Principles: Short Form + Long Form for Modern Buyers

1. 3 Critical Nurture Lines
   In the transcript, we referenced that the short form ads are just one of the nurture lines. The other two are:
   - Long Form Content (what we're adding in this section), and
   - Your Sales Team doing manual outreach (text, calls, or any contact that ensures 100% inbox deliverability).
2. Combined, these three lines of nurture handle the reality that in advanced markets (Stage 3 or 4 of Market Sophistication), you need every possible angle.
3. Don't Force Long Form First
   There's a misconception some have: "Make prospects watch a 2-hour training before they can even talk to sales." In practice, you lose a ton of potential leads that way. Instead, keep the direct response approach running simultaneously, and then feed them long form via remarketing.
4. Market Sophistication & Safety
   - Stage 1 & 2: Basic claims get people to buy quickly.
   - Stage 3 & 4: Now the market has been pitched a dozen ways. Skepticism is high; they need deeper demonstrations of expertise. Long form is key here to establish "This is exactly how we do it" and "Here's proof, detail, nuance" that you can't cram into a 60-second reel.

The "Value Density" Rule for Long Form

One of the biggest mistakes is posting an hour-long video that only has 5–10 minutes of actual gold. Modern viewers are impatient—even with your retargeted audience.

- Open Strong: Immediately, in the first 5–10 seconds, call out the big problem or outcome. Example: "If your sales team complains that paid leads are never warm enough, here's how we fix that with content retargeting…"

- Cut Fillers: Remove fluff like “Hey guys,” “Please like & subscribe,” or casual side-chatter.
- Every ~45 Seconds: Drop a banger insight, a tip or piece of data that makes them say “Ooh, that was good.”

Format Examples:

- Podcasts you’ve guested on or hosted. Chop them up, removing tangents and irrelevant chatter.
- YouTube Trainings: Remove your intros, “smash that like button,” etc.
- Webinars: Turn your best, high-retention sections into standalone long form pieces.

Minimum & Maximum Length

Shorter Long Form: ~10–15 minutes

- Enough time to go deeper than a quick reel but still manageable to watch in a single sitting.
  Longer Long Form: 30 minutes to 2 hours
- If your content is truly high-value, people will watch it (we’ve had 2-hour podcasts cost around $1.07 for a full watch).
- The key is it must maintain that value density so that viewers remain engaged.

Building Your Long Form “Hammer Them” Campaign

We strongly recommend a separate campaign from your short form Hammer Them. The reason is both for clarity in budget optimization and to ensure your short form content doesn’t outcompete your long form for impressions.

1. Campaign Setup
   - Objective: Choose Engagement at the campaign level.
   - CBO vs. ABO: You can do either, but ABO ensures you force each video to get budget. CBO might push all your spend to a “top performer,” which can cause certain pieces of long form to be under-shown.
2. Ad Set Level

    - One Video Per Ad Set: If you have, say, 15 longer videos, create 15 ad sets.
    - Audience: The same retargeting group (e.g., "booked a call in last 72 hrs," or "leads in a 2-week sales cycle"). Make sure to meet the 100-person minimum so the ad serves.
    - Exclude 3-Second Viewers: Each ad set excludes a custom audience of people who have already watched that video for 3 seconds, so they won't see it repeatedly. This rotation ensures each user gets hammered with different pieces, not stuck seeing the same one.
3. Budgets & Frequency
    - If using ABO, start with about $5–$10/day per ad set (per long form video). Check if you're getting a frequency of at least 5–10 impressions over your target window (e.g., 72 hours if it's a short window).
    - For a longer sales cycle (2–3 weeks), you might want them to see all 15 videos. Adjust budgets upward if you're not hitting that frequency.
4. Creative & Copy
    - Remove fluff from your longer content.
    - Hook Hard in the first few seconds.
    - Optionally, include some micro-chapters or on-screen text hooking them into each major takeaway.

15–30+ Pieces of Long Form (If Possible)

- Some of you might only have 5–10 workable long form pieces right now, but aim for a library of 15–30.
- The more you have, the more variety leads see, which strengthens the sense that you have "endless expertise" to solve their exact problem.
- If you truly have dozens of strong, high-density pieces, keep adding them—there's no "upper limit."

If you have fewer than 15 (like 6–12 pieces total) and can't create more right away, that's still fine to start. Just note that having fewer videos can mean less variety and potentially a lower overall impact. Strive to grow your long form library.

The Big Picture: Short Form for Awareness, Long Form for Safety

1. Short Form => Awareness
    - Typically 30–50 vertical micro-videos (under 90s) addressing common questions, quick objections, and “framing” content.
    - High frequency (15–20 exposures) in a tight window.
2. Long Form => Safety
    - 15–30 high-value “in-depth” videos (10+ minutes, up to 2 hours).
    - People who are serious about solving the problem will watch.
    - They gain confidence that “This person really knows their stuff,” and it kills buyer’s skepticism or “I need more info” mindsets.
3. Sales Team => Personalized Touch
    - Your closers can reference that long form content in texts, emails, or conversation. “If you haven’t had a chance, check out that deeper training on [xyz topic]. I think it’ll really answer your questions on [whatever], so our call can be more about next steps.”

FAQs & Pro Tips for Long Form Retargeting

1. Should I run these before or after they book a call?
    - After direct response or after they become a lead. Just like the short form Hammer Them, the long form is served post-action (booked call, opted in, etc.). You want them to see it in that crucial window before the call or purchase.
2. What if my sales cycle is short and I only have a 48–72 hour window?
    - You can still show a few long form pieces if your leads meet the 100-person minimum audience threshold. Start with your absolute best 5–10 long form videos.
3. Will the same 3-second rule apply?
    - Yes. You do not want the same piece of long form showing to someone repeatedly just because they paused for a second. Soon as they watch 3 seconds, they get excluded from that ad set and see another one.
4. What if I can’t get people to watch the longer videos?
    - Revisit your opening hook and value density. If it’s truly relevant to their problem and teased properly in the first few seconds, we’ve seen up to 90+ minute consumption.
5. Is CBO or ABO better for long form?
    - ABO forces each piece to spend its daily budget, ensuring distribution.

    - CBO might let Facebook over-optimize to 1–2 top-performing videos. That can be good or bad depending on your strategy. We recommend testing both.
6. How do I measure success with long form?
    - Keep an eye on frequency (are they seeing enough videos?), plus watch your cost per 25%/50%/100% view in your Ads Manager breakdown.
    - Ultimately, check the sales team's feedback: Do leads show up more sold? Are they referencing specific deep-dive points from the videos?
    - Monitor any improvement in your close rates and average order values (AOV). Well-informed buyers often buy more or higher-tier packages.

Bringing It All Together

- Short Form hammered across 30–50 pieces still does a ton of the heavy lifting—making your brand familiar, covering the big questions, objections, and setting expectations.
- Long Form is your advanced method for truly "selling the call" so that they show up not just warmed up, but ready to sign. In a Stage 3 or Stage 4 Market Sophistication environment, thoroughness often becomes the deciding factor for which provider they trust.
- This synergy of short and long form within the Hammer Them blueprint makes the difference between a lead "just wanting more info" on the call vs. someone who's effectively convinced themselves already, needing only a final nudge from your sales rep.

Final Word: Long form content is not a "replacement" for short form—it's an augmentation. Your leads see your short form, get introduced to your concepts, and then, if they want to dive deeper (and many will), they binge your 10–120 minute pieces. That sets your sales team up for a real, no-nonsense closing conversation. Embrace both, and watch your close rate, show rate, and profit per lead climb.

Sending Six Emails a Day

As part of the Hammer Them strategy, sending six targeted emails a day to your leads in the critical window between when they book a call and when the call occurs can dramatically boost your show rates and sales conversions. The worst thing to do is to simply rely on those bullshit "your call is coming up at this time emails" to do all the heavy lifting. Sure, you still need those and that can count for apart of your 6 a day, but they should be like 3-4 emails (alongside the reminder texts) max out of the 18 emails.

This email strategy works synergistically with your high-frequency content retargeting ads, ensuring that your leads are thoroughly educated, their objections are preemptively addressed, and they are primed to make a purchasing decision by the time they speak with your sales team.

Why Six Emails a Day?

They want the information, it's that simple. You either wait to get the same information covered on the sales call, or you hammer the fuck out of them before they show up to the sales call so your sales people have an easier job closing them.

When a prospect books a call, they are signaling interest but are not yet fully sold on your offer. There is often a 2-3 day window between booking and the actual call, and during this time, doubts can creep in, questions can arise, and enthusiasm can wane. By delivering six carefully crafted emails each day during this window, you keep the conversation active, build trust, and address any concerns they may have.

This high-frequency email approach leverages the same psychological principles that make the Hammer Them ad strategy effective:

- Familiarity Bias and Mere-Exposure Effect: Frequent emails increase the prospect's familiarity with your brand, fostering trust and likability.
- Proactive Objection Handling: By addressing objections upfront, you reduce resistance and make the sales conversation smoother.
- Expectation Setting: Clear communication about what to expect helps align the prospect's expectations with what you deliver.
- Building Momentum: Continuous engagement keeps the prospect's interest levels high, making them more likely to show up for the call and convert.

The Four Categories of Email Content

To maximize the impact of your emails, each one should fall into one of four key categories. This ensures that you are comprehensively addressing all aspects of the prospect's decision-making process.

1. Questions: Address the initial, most pressing questions that prospects have about your product or service. These are foundational queries that need clear and direct answers.

2. Second-Layer Questions: These are follow-up questions that naturally arise after the initial ones are answered. They dive deeper into specifics and help prospects gain a fuller understanding.
3. Objections: Proactively tackle common objections that might prevent a prospect from moving forward. By addressing these concerns head-on, you reduce friction in the sales process.
4. Expectations: Set realistic expectations about the outcomes, process, and what the prospect can anticipate from working with you. This helps in building trust and preparing them for the next steps.

Crafting High-Impact Emails

Each email should be focused, valuable, and aligned with one of the four categories. Here's how to approach crafting these emails:

- Be Educational and Informative: Provide clear, concise information that educates the prospect. Avoid fluff and get straight to the point.
- Use Engaging Subject Lines: Capture attention with subject lines that pique curiosity or address a specific concern.
- Include Social Proof: Where appropriate, incorporate testimonials, case studies, or success stories that reinforce your message.
- Call to Action: While the primary goal is to inform and build trust, gentle reminders about the upcoming call can help increase show rates.

Generating Content Ideas

To create compelling email content, leverage multiple sources:

- Sales Team Insights: Consult with your sales team to identify the most common questions and objections they encounter. They are on the front lines and can provide invaluable insights.
- Prospect Interactions: Analyze any interactions you've had with prospects, such as previous emails, chat logs, or survey responses, to identify recurring themes.
- Anticipate Questions: Put yourself in the prospect's shoes and consider what you would want to know before making a decision.
- Feedback Loops: After implementing the email strategy, gather feedback on which emails are most effective and adjust accordingly.

Integrating Emails with the Hammer Them Ad Strategy

While the emails are working to inform and engage prospects in their inbox, your Hammer Them ads are reinforcing these messages on social media platforms. Ensure that there's alignment between the content of your emails and your ads:

- Consistent Messaging: Use similar language and address the same themes in both emails and ads.
- Content Repurposing: Transform email content into social media posts or videos, and vice versa. This creates a cohesive experience across channels.
- Cross-Promotion: In emails, mention that they might see more helpful content on social media, encouraging them to engage with your ads.

- Timing: Distribute the six emails throughout the day at strategic intervals to maintain engagement without overwhelming the prospect.
- Personalization: Use the prospect's name and any relevant information to make the emails feel personalized.
- Mobile Optimization: Ensure that emails are optimized for mobile devices, as many people check emails on their phones.
- Compliance: Adhere to email marketing laws and regulations, such as including unsubscribe options and respecting privacy.

Measuring Success

Monitor key metrics to assess the effectiveness of your email strategy:

- Open Rates: Aim for at least a 40-50% open rate on these emails. High open rates indicate that your subject lines are effective and your prospects are engaged.
- Click-Through Rates: If including links, track how many prospects are clicking through to additional content.
- Reply Rates: Engagement in the form of replies can indicate that prospects are interested and considering your offer.
- Show Rates: Track whether there's an increase in the number of prospects who attend the scheduled calls.
- Conversion Rates: Ultimately, the goal is to increase sales. Monitor whether the email strategy correlates with higher conversion rates.

Continuous Improvement

- Feedback Loop: Regularly gather feedback from your sales team about the quality of the calls and any recurring questions or objections that are still coming up.
- A/B Testing: Experiment with different subject lines, email formats, and content to see what resonates best with your audience.
- Content Updates: Keep your email content fresh and relevant by updating it based on new insights, market changes, or updates to your product or service.

Conclusion

Implementing the six emails a day strategy as part of your Hammer Them approach ensures that your leads are not just informed but also excited and ready to take the next step with your business. By addressing their questions, handling objections, and setting clear expectations, you pave the way for more productive sales conversations and higher conversion rates. This proactive communication turns your sales calls into confirmations rather than pitches, making your sales process more efficient and effective.

Remember, the key to success with this strategy is consistency, relevance, and a genuine focus on providing value to your prospects. When done correctly, this approach not only boosts your immediate sales but also strengthens your brand reputation and fosters long-term customer relationships.

Pro Tips

- Do not use copyrighted music when organically posting them, otherwise you won't be able to use the content via paid engagement campaigns.
- Optimize everything for vertical ideally for reels, however you can use long form too, you just have to post it straight to FB only since IG has length cut off limits - I've run 2 hour podcasts that get $1.07 for someone to watch the entire thing
- If frequency is too low, crank up the budget, if frequency is too high - that's good
- If frequency is too high on single piece of content, it means the opening hook sucks and people are even watching past 3 seconds, change the hook
- Sales person feedback is the leading KPI you want to see improving first before anything else will statistically show improvements, start there for gauging success if running call funnels and lead forms
