Mastering VSLs
(Video Sales Letter Creation) SOP

Presented By Jeremy Haynes

Made For:

Personal Brands, High Ticket Product or Service Businesses, Digital Marketers, Entrepreneurs, and Anyone looking to scale their business using high-converting Video Sales Letters (VSLs).

Background

Over the years, I've seen countless marketers and business owners overcomplicate the hell out of their VSLs. They get lost in templates, scripts, and end up creating these monstrosities that bore their audience to death. Let's cut the crap. If you're not using a mini webinar template or any kind of VSL-based template, there's a simple flow that works like magic every single time.

When you run a VSL and you're going off-script, or you just want to make your own template, there's a straightforward path to follow. It's not rocket science, but it does require you to be direct, honest, and to the point. This SOP is going to lay it all out for you.

The Objective

Our goal here is simple: Create a VSL that grabs your audience by the collar, holds their attention, and compels them to take action. We're going to achieve this by following a proven flow that addresses every concern, builds trust, and eliminates any friction in the buying process.

The Process

1. Hook Them Immediately: What You Can Help Them With

Start your VSL by telling them exactly what you can do for them. Be direct. This is your opening hook, and it needs to be strong enough to make them think, "Yeah, I'm in the right place."

Example:

"Hey guys, my name is Jeremy Haynes. I can help you master internet marketing. If you're looking to get into digital marketing, I'm your guy."

No fluff, no beating around the bush. Tell them who you are and how you can solve their problem.

2. Establish Credibility: Why You Can Help Them

Now that you've got their attention, you need to build trust. This is where you dive into why you're the person or company that can actually help them.

How to Do It:

- Share Relevant Experience: Mention how long you've been in the game, the successes you've had, and any significant milestones.
- Provide Specifics: Use concrete numbers that are believable and demonstrate your expertise.

- Avoid Irrelevant Details: Don't bore them with unnecessary backstory. They don't care where you're from unless it directly relates to how you can help them.

Example:

"Allow me to introduce myself. I've been a digital marketer for over 12 years and have spent a ton of money on paid advertising. The better you are at these skills, the more money you can make. My first skill set was..."

Keep it focused on building credibility.

3. Sell Them on the Opportunity: The Bigger Picture

After establishing why they should trust you, broaden the scope. Sell them on the industry or the big 'why' behind what you're offering.

How to Do It:

- Highlight the Value of the Industry: Explain why digital marketing (or whatever you're offering) is so important and valuable right now.
- Compare and Contrast: Show them why your solution stands out compared to other options.
- Use Facts and Trends: Support your points with relevant data or trends that make your argument stronger.

Example:

"Digital marketing skills are some of the most valuable you can have today. Let me tell you why mastering internet marketing can completely transform your business and your life."

Make them see the immense opportunity they're missing out on if they don't act.

4. Present Your Offer: How You Can Help Them

Now, transition into how you can specifically help them seize this opportunity. This is where you present your offer in detail.

Key Points:

- State the Price Upfront: Don't dance around it. Be transparent.
- Explain What's Included: Break down everything they get when they sign up or purchase.

- Avoid Value Stacking with Inflated Prices: Don't make up fake high prices just to slash them. It's dishonest and kills trust.

Example:

"So here's how I want to help you get involved. My Master Internet Marketing program costs $5,000. Let me explain what comes with it. You're going to get access to seven weeks of live classes, each about three to five hours long, covering different topics each week. There are worksheets, downloads, strategies, and SOPs to help you implement everything. Plus, you'll get access to all future live classes and our active Telegram community where you can ask me questions directly."

Lay it all out. Make sure they understand the value they're getting.

5. Handle Objections: Answer Their Questions Before They Ask

Before they even have a chance to object, address their most common concerns. This shows that you understand them and have thought through everything.

How to Do It:

- List Common Questions: Think about what people usually ask or worry about.
- Provide Clear Answers: Be straightforward and honest.

Example:

"Some of the most common questions we get are:

- 'Why is it $5,000?' Let me break down the value for you.
- 'Are there any payment plans or financing options?' Absolutely, and here's how they work.
- 'What's the expected timeline to get results?' Typically, our students start seeing results within..."

Tackling objections head-on builds trust and lowers barriers to purchase.

6. Qualify Your Audience: Who It's For and Who It's Not For

Be clear about who will benefit most from your offer and who won't. This not only attracts the right people but also saves you time dealing with unqualified leads.

How to Do It:

- Describe the Ideal Client: Be specific about the traits, circumstances, and mindset of those who will get the most out of your offer.
- State Who It's Not For: Politely but firmly mention who should not apply or purchase.

Example:

"This program is for action-takers who are serious about mastering digital marketing and willing to invest in themselves. If you're not ready to put in the work or looking for a get-rich-quick scheme, this isn't for you."

Filtering your audience ensures better results for both you and your clients.

7. Make a Clear Call to Action: Guide Them on Next Steps

Tell them exactly what you want them to do next. Don't assume they'll figure it out on their own.

Example:

"If you're ready to take your digital marketing skills to the next level, click the link below to apply now."

Your CTA should be straightforward and compelling.

8. Provide Authentic Testimonials: Show Proof

People want to see that others have succeeded with your offer. Include real testimonials that are believable and relatable.

How to Do It:

- Use Actual Screenshots: Show real messages, emails, or posts from satisfied clients.
- Include Names and Photos: If possible, to add authenticity.
- Avoid Over-Polishing: Don't make them look too slick; authenticity trumps production value here.

Example:

"Here's what some of our students have to say:

[Insert actual screenshots of testimonials from Telegram or other platforms, showing names and photos.]"

Make sure these testimonials highlight specific results or experiences.

9. Reiterate the Value: Address Any Remaining Skepticism

For those who are still on the fence, provide additional reassurance.

What to Include:

- Refund Policy: If you offer one, explain it clearly.
- Repeat Key Benefits: Remind them of what they stand to gain.
- Final Call to Action: Encourage them to take action now.

Example:

"We stand behind our program 100%. If you're not satisfied within 30 days, we'll give you a full refund. There's no risk to you. So, click below to get started today and transform your future."

Your goal here is to eliminate any last-minute doubts.

Additional Insights

Optimizing VSL Length Based on Your Audience

Understand that different audiences require different approaches when it comes to the length of your VSL.

- Affluent, Action-Taking Audiences:
  - Preferred Length: 2 to 10 minutes.
  - Reasoning: They value their time and make decisions quickly. They don't need long explanations.
- Less Affluent, More Analytical Audiences:
  - Preferred Length: 15 to 45 minutes, sometimes even longer.
  - Reasoning: They need more information, reassurance, and details to make a decision.

Remember: Tailor your VSL length to the financial status and decision-making style of your target audience.

Analyzing Your VSL's Performance

Keep an eye on key metrics to understand how your VSL is performing.

- Play Rate: The percentage of visitors who click play.
    - Improving It: Use compelling thumbnails, ensure your page design focuses attention on the video, and frame the expectation in your ads.
- Engagement Rate: How much of your video viewers watch on average.
    - Analyzing Drop-Off Points: Identify where viewers lose interest and adjust your content accordingly.
- Conversions: Ultimately, how many viewers take the desired action.

Use tools like Wistia to get detailed analytics on your video performance.

Always Disclose the Price Upfront

Being transparent about your pricing is crucial.

- Builds Trust: Honesty fosters credibility with your audience.
- Filters Out Unqualified Leads: Saves you time and resources.
- Aligns Expectations: Avoids surprises later in the sales process.

Don't hide your prices thinking it'll get you more leads. Quality over quantity.

Maintaining Sales Team Morale

By providing qualified, well-informed leads, you keep your sales team's morale high.

- Qualified Leads: Salespeople prefer talking to prospects who are ready and able to buy.
- Better Conversions: Higher morale often leads to better performance.
- Avoiding Burnout: Reduces frustration from dealing with unqualified leads.

Your sales team is a critical part of your business. Keep them motivated by ensuring the leads they get are top-notch.
