Client Reporting - Standard Operating Procedure

Presented By Jeremy Haynes

Department: Account Manager

Estimated Time: 15 minutes per week

Goal/Intention: Send a weekly report to the client that details what we did to help drive them revenue.

Tools Needed:

- The ad channel data we're generating results from
- Potentially a third party tool if they have it like Wickedreports or Google Analytics, really whatever they currently trust and use for reporting, we want access to
- Email client like Gmail

Process:

1. We're going to create and send an email to the client detailing the actions taken for the past week that drove revenue, so get started by opening your email
    a. Add client and their assigned sales person, also anyone in their team to the CC field
    b. Subject 'weekly report'
2. We're going to start the email off with the overall ROI (return on investment) for the past week worth of spend and overall amount of revenue generated from that spend, all trackable back to your actions
    a. Depending on the client, you may have to generate an offline conversion report rather than being able to rely solely on ad manager data
    b. We also ensure we check for accuracy against the tools used to generate the customers
        i. As example, we want to make sure CRM shows same amount of properly tagged customer information as what we report on from the ads manager, otherwise we know we'll have a discrepancy
        ii. If we're generating applications and then calls for closers, we want to ensure that we check jotforms or typeform, and scheduleonce or calendly for same info - to ensure we report on same amount of apps and calls as what those tools show, so we know if we're under reporting, over reporting or accurate

1. If we find a discrepancy, we do the manual math of spend against the amount of calls, apps, and closes rather than rely on what's in the ads manager
2. We'd also export the weekly data from the ads manager if this is the case, same with the data from the other tools that show different data and hand off to a VA to visualise the data accurately so we can leverage those visuals within the weekly report itself

The month of April was the best month yet!!

Truly incredible progress even amidst the coronavirus chaos, in an industry I'm sure most would speculate would have a downturn.

This month there were 62 deals closed, and that produced over $91,312 in revenue!

   a. Example of the the intro of the email paired with visual ^
4. The middle part of the email after the intro we typically highlight any changes that were made, any additional campaigns that may have been launched we'll highlight, or we'll show the results of an A/B test here
   a. We'll also ensure to cover other key KPIs that the client cares about
      i. This varies per client because each clients business cares about different KPIs to track and measure success b.
This was the best month we've had working together yet, and there's a ton of momentum that's carrying over into May already with additional leads coming in and some new campaigns that are going to get launched including D2D Elite.

At the first part of the month, we had some older campaigns that started to fail because the copy in those ads specifically addressed going door to door, which wasn't possible in a majority of the US because of the quarantine.

So I reworked the copy, and mentioned how to get deals from home, how to 'digitally door knock' and BOOM - lead volume shot through the roof, and the cost per lead dropped 300%

   c. Example of middle of email reporting ^
5. Our main focus before the close of the email, is to highlight anyone or anything that helped contribute to the success of that week
Also have to give a huge shoutout to Riley and Kyle for getting deals closed from all these additional leads.

There were a total of 203 leads for an average lead cost of $49 per demo request, and they closed 62 of them which is a 30% close ratio!

   b. We love to highlight sales people here that closed deals, and pepper in some key KPIs like closing % or any other relevant conversion stats.
6. We'll close the email up with overall ROI for that month so far, and typically overall spend to revenue generated numbers to focus back on the bigger game

We spent: $11,836.49 and made back $91,312 in revenue, which is a 671.4% ROI with a net of $79,476!

Also since it's been 3 months since we started working together, I figured I'd also do a report for the quarter.

Over the last 3 months, from Feb 1st through April 30th, you spent $20,077.45 and made back $172,034.50 which is a 756% ROI netting $151,957!

I'm pumped to keep going strong, and we have a lot of scale potential. The month of May should be the first 6 figure month from ad return which is very exciting news.

Looking forward to continuing crushing it together.

8. In some instances, you may not have a good week, and we want to ensure those reporting emails are closed with a ‘here’s what revenue driven actions we’re taking this week’so the client has a clear picture of what you’re going to do to get things turned around

A few actions we're taking to further increase ROI:

- get the branding webinar ads launched after the emails typed this past week are added to marketing automation
- get new retargeting ads launched with objection handler ad hooks since both short and long form copy hasn't crushed it
- get emails typed up for the NYREI funnel so it can be launched in the following week to convert people to become agents
- help Kyle finish the up-sell tiers and get connected to closers to maximize ROI and LTV of customers through the up-sells
- run more split tests on the funnel to further increase the conversion rate from 3% to 5%-6%

Traction is picking up on ad social interaction as well, which helps with reach and CPM costs being in our favor.

9. All in all, we want the client to know what we’ve spent on their behalf, and what we made, afterall - we are the modern day wealth managers.
